Treves, trésh (anc. Augusta Treverorum Fr. Trèves trav. Ger. Trier tréer) a city of Rhenish Prussia, picturesquely situated on the right bank of the river Moselle, here crossed by an ancient bridge of Roman origin 57 miles NW of Coblenz. In the old quarters the streets are narrow and crooked. Treves which is perhaps the oldest town in Germany is rich in Roman remains comprising the interesting Porta Nigra a fortified gate a brick basilica dating from the fourth century, a new Protestant church, a large amphitheatre, the picturesque ruins of a Roman palace and the remains of ancient baths. Among the main objects of interest in the town are the venerable cathedral one of the oldest in Germany containing the famous reliquary of St. Peter and many monuments the interesting Liebfrauenkirche circular in form with a richly decorated portal the municipal library containing many valuable incunables and manuscripts and the provincial museum with a fine collection of antiquities. Just outside the town rises the column of the Virgin. The industries comprise iron foundry, tanning, dyeing and the manufacture of furniture, pianos, stained glass etc. Treves was the capital of the Celtic Treveri and in later Roman times an imperial residence. It very early became the seat of a bishopric, which from the ninth century figures as an archiepiscopal see. The archbishops of Treves rose to the position of princes ruling a considerable district and occupied a place among the imperial electors—the princes who had the privilege of choosing the head of the Holy Roman (German) Empire. The city prospered under its archbishops, but struggled to shake off their authority and finally towards the close of the sixteenth century was recognized as a free imperial city. The ecclesiastical principality was extinguished in the wars of the French Revolution and most of the territory together with the city of Treves, was assigned to Prussia by the Congress of Vienna. A new bishopric of Treves was instituted in 1802. Pop. in 1900, 43,506.

Trient, tré-let (It. Trieste, tré-á-let, anc. Tergeste) the principal seaport of Austria-Hungary capital of the Khatorland (Littoral or Coastland) on the Gulf of Triest the northernmost part of the Adriatic Sea, 73 miles ENE of Venice. Lat. of observatory 45° 33' 45" N lon 13° 45' 45" E. It constitutes with its district (combined area, 87 sq m.) an Austrian crown-land. The city extends in the form of an amphitheatre along the slopes of the Karst. It consists of the old town whose tortuous and steep streets rise from the foot of the Schiavone and the new quarter (or Theresienstadt) with broad streets and handsome houses situated on a plain skirting the sea. The Corso the most important thoroughfare, separates the two parts of the city. E of the Corso are the two principal squares the Piazza della Borsa and the Piazza Grande the former containing the statue of Emperor Leopold I and a handsome group of Neptune, and the latter a statue of Charles VI to whom Trient is indebted for its rise to commercial prosperity. The Passeggiata di Sant Andrea, an avenue commanding fine views, extends along the shore on the S for a distance of 3 miles. At the western end of the Corso close to the harbor are the splendid town hall and the Tergesteo, an extensive structure, whose cruciform arcades serve as the exchange. The cathedral of San Giusto, situated on an eminence, and occupying the site of an ancient Roman temple, is the most noteworthy ecclesiastical structure. It was formed in the fourteenth century by the union of a small Byzantine church dating from the sixth century and two other religious edifices of equal age. San Nicolò dei Greci, the Greek church has a lavishly decorated interior. Near Santa Maria Maggiore, a Jesuit church is the Arco di Riccardo, an old town-gate. The ruins of a Roman theatre and of an aqueduct are among the remains of antiquity. The Museo Leydner, containing a collection of Roman antiquities, is situated in a now abandoned burial-ground, which contains the grave and monument of the archaeologist Winckelmann who was murdered at Trient in 1768. The Ferdinand-Maximilian Museum in the building of the Natural Academy contains a remarkably complete collection of the fauna of the Adriatic Sea. Other objects of interest are the collections of the Municipal Museum of Antiquities and the paintings and sculptures in the superb Palazzo Revoltella. On the Piazza Giuseppe is the bronze statue of Maximilian of Mexico by Schilling. The famous chateau of Miramar which belonged to Maximilian, 5 miles N of Trient, commands a charming view of the city and the sea. The Public Garden (Giardino Pubblico) is the principal open-air resort within the city. The Imperial Academy which imparts commercial and nautical instruction is the principal institution of learning.

The harbor was greatly enlarged in 1867-78 and vast improvements, to be completed in 1912, are projected. The Canal Grande, about one-quarter of a mile long, penetrates into the main town. More than 10,000 vessels enter the harbor annually. The naval structures in the harbor comprise the extensive wharves of the Austrian Lloyd and of the Stabilimento Tecnico Triestino and the Arsenal of the Lloyd.

Trieste is the chief emporium of the maritime trade of the empire. Trinidad, trín-e-dad (Sp. pron. tro-ne-dár) an island of the British West Indies second in size to Jamaica, lies off the coast of Venezuela (bounding on the E the Gulf of Paria) and opposite the northern mouth of the Orinoco. It is separated from the peninsula of Paria (Cumaná) by the Dragon's Mouth (Booca de Dragón). Lat. of centre (approx.) 10° 30' N. Area, 1754 sq. m. The northern and southern borders of the island are contoured by E-W ranges of mountains, which are structural continuations of the double chain of northern Venezuela and terminate in the NE and SE points of Trinidad known as Galera and (Galeota) points. The northern mountains attain in Twentche Peak (Las Cuevas) an elevation of 2100 feet, which is the culminating point of the island. The southern elevations do not appear anywhere to greatly surpass 1900 ft. (Trinity Hill is the SE). The interior is in the main a low lying undulating plain, or series of plains, with Tamana near the centre at its highest elevation (1120 ft.). The island is fairly well watered, streams descending to most parts of the coast. The largest streams are the Orupomche, Caroni, and Oyolire (or Guataaro). Most of the island is still largely wooded and the forest unfolds itself with rare magnificence and luxuriance. The more striking native and cultivated forms of vegetation are represented by numerous palms, the elicotón tree, bread fruit, tamarind, mango, bamboo, coffee, cacao, banana, and sugar-cane, the last four being extensively grown and giving to the island much of its agricultural resource. Among the animals are the mangrove-stag (or deer) peccary, ant-eater, armadillo, sloth, tiger-cat, peccary opossum and monkey. Lizards and turtles are numerous and the alligator is fairly abundant in some places. Many of the most beautiful of the South American birds are represented on the island. The mineral resources of Trinidad, so far at least as they have been commercially worked, consist almost entirely of native pitch which is obtained in large quantities from the famous pitch lake of La Brea, near the W coast, which covers about 90 acres and which in 1903 yielded 192,321 tons of asphalt. Along the S coast and not far from Jesus Point, which forms the SW extremity of the island are a number of mud volcanoes. The climate of Trinidad is unhealthy or malarial on the low lying coasts, but in the interior although with a hot, moist, and conserving temperature it is fairly salubrious. Trinidad is a crown colony the public affairs being administered by a governor and by an executive and a legislative council. The island of Tobago belongs administratively to Trinidad. Port-of-Spain on the NW side of the island, is the capital and one of the finest towns in the West Indies. Trinidad was discovered by Columbus in 1498. It belonged to Spain till 1763 when it was seized by the English who were confirmed in its possession by the treaty of Amiens in 1802. Pop. in 1884, 171,014. In 1891 200,628. Tripoli, trip-o-le, called by the natives Tarabulus, th-rá-bo-loos (ana. Tripolis) a region of northern Africa, included among the Barbary States and constituting a vilayet or province of the Turkish Empire. In its broadest extent it occupies the entire Mediterranean border between Tunis on the W and Egypt on the E and thus includes Barca (montemarrisk of Bengasi). Southward the boundaries are but ill-determined but ordinarily they are made to include the region known as Fezzan, which is physiographically separated from what is frequently designated Tripoli proper by the vast rocky plateau known as the Hamada el-Homra (1500-1700 feet elevation) and the volcanic masses of the Jebel-Soda (or Black Mountain) and Haruj es-Sud. The characteristics of Barca and Fezzan will be found treated under their own heads. Tripoli proper extends not much beyond (southward of) lat. 32° N. the lying entirely outside of the tropics. Its Mediterranean border is deeply indented by the Gulf of Sidra (anc. Syrtis Major) in the E. where the true desert (Libyan or Saharan) approaches quite to the sea. Otherwise the coast-line presents few indentations and is nearly destitute of harbors, almost the only really good one being that on which stands the city of Tripoli. The greater portion of the interior of Tripoli appears to be a sand and limestone plateau of moderate elevation destitute of permanent water-courses, and irregularly relieved by minor mountain elevations or hilly ridges. In the NW abutting upon the Mediterranean at Khoms and directed WSW is the prominent escarpment known in its different parts as Jebel Nefusa, Yefra and Ghariat (rising to 2000-3000 feet or more) beyond which is an expanse of plain and lowland designated the Plain of Tripoli (or the Jafra) which in its broadest part is about 90 miles wide. A minor portion of this plain, in the close surroundings of the capital city is watered by means of irrigation wells and is cultivated. The most fertile tract of the vilayet is the Mochiia, a Mediterranean border-strip about 15 miles long having the city of Tripoli near its centre, and extending inland hardly 5 miles. The whole of this district is occupied by fertile fields, on which wheat, barley, millet, and Indian corn are grown and by plantations of date-palms olive-groves, vineyards or orchards, and gardens, yielding in abundance oranges, pomegranates, figs, jujubes, apricots, plums, and water melons. Other products of the coast are cotton, silk, tobacco, saffron madder and castor-oil. The interior produces annua, dates, and galls the carob and lentis are indigenous. There are few products in Tripoli other than the agricultural. Barley is the most important crop. Some asparto grass is exported.

The climate of Tripoli has its distinctive African characteristics. The summers are hot, as well on the coast as in the interior but sea-breezes render the former region quite bearable. Winter brings much cool and even cold weather and snow rests for short periods on the upper hill-slopes and occasionally on the basal plains. The average annual temperature of many parts of the interior is 80° or more, and in Fezzan at Murzuk an extreme shade-temperature of 133° has been noted. Rain in the coast region are not exceptional in Barca the winter rainfall is 14-20 inches.

Tripoli proper and the montemarrisk of Bengasi have together an area of about 400,000 sq m. and a population estimated at about 1,500,000. The inhabitants comprise Berbers, Moors, Arab Bedouins, Jews, and negroes, with a few thousand Europeans, mainly Maltese and Italians.

The ancient name of Tripoli (i. e. three cities) originated as a collective designation of the three cities of Oea, Leptis Magna, and Sabrta, situated on the Mediterranean coast. The first-named finally became known as Tripolis. The region formed part of the Roman Empire, and in later times there was a Provincia Tripolitana. In the seventh century northern Africa became part of the Mohammedan world. In the middle of the sixteenth century Tripoli was subjected by the Ottoman Turks. Under Turkish sovereignty the city of Tripoli became the seat of corsairs, who were the terror of the Mediterranean. The Tripolitans were repeatedly attacked by the French and in 1801-05 the United States waged a successful war against them. Under the treaty the country was for a long time virtually independent of Constantinople.

Tripoli (anc. Ze) the capital of the vilayet of Tripoli, is situated on a rocky promontory of the Mediterranean Sea, in lat 33° 54' N lon 13° 11' E. It is near the middle part of the very fertile border-strip designated the Moubiya, and back of it is the larger plain of Tripoli or the Jahra. The city presents with its surrounding wall its mosques and minarets a distinctly Oriental and even pleasing aspect as seen from the outside, but the interior with its narrow and crooked streets or lanes and cheerless houses, is uninviting. The more notable buildings are the bey's castle, an ancient pile of vast extent, built so irregularly that all appearance of symmetry is lost, and the great mosque a handsome and majestic structure, in which the roof formed by a number of small cupolas is supported by many Doric marble columns, said to have once belonged to a Christian church. The city has a number of Christian churches, a convent, several synagogues, a number of public baths, hammams, ovens, and European hotels. Numerous ancient remains have been found here, among them a magnificent triumphal arch erected in honor of the Roman emperors Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus. The only manufactures of any consequence are carpets which have long been celebrated, mantles and other woollen stuffs, and ordinary and morocco leather. Tripoli has a fairly good and very spacious harbor which is accessible to vessels drawing 14 feet or somewhat more. It has still an extensive trade with the far interior of the continent, and receives much better commodities through its caravan connections with Wadai and Darfur the region about Lake Chad and Timbuktu. Pop. estimated at 25,000-30,000 of whom probably not less than 6,000 are Jews, who occupy a special quarter of the city known as Harva. Tripoli Visceria (trip o-le vîs ke-â) or Old Tripoli is a small maritime town 45 miles W of Tripoli.

Tripoli (Arab Tarabulus trâ-bou-lous and Tripolis) a town of Syria near the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, at the foot of a spine of Mount Lebanon and at the south of the Kadisha, 46 miles NNE of Beirut. Lat. 34° 26' N. It presents a picturesque appearance with its white houses and around it are olive groves, vineyards, and plantations of mulberries, oranges, and lemons. The streets are paved. There are many mosques, monasteries, and churches. An old castle overlooks the town. The port of Tripoli, El Minia (Marina) is on a projecting tongue of land about 2 miles from the town and is connected with it by a tramway. Tripoli has a large trade exporting barley raw silk, wool soap, fruits, sponges, etc. It is a busy seat of the silk industry and has extensive manufactures of soap. The place possesses numerous schools. The population inclusive of El-Minia (which has about 7,000 inhabitants) is estimated at 39,000. The Christian number about one-fifth of the total the bulk of them being Greeks who have the trade largely in their hands. Tripoli was one of the cities of the Phoenicians. It then stood close to the water. It was in the hands of the Crusaders during nearly the whole of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries and prospered under them. When the Moslems again came into possession, the place was rebuilt on a new site.

Tunis (Fr. Tunisie), a regency and French protectorate of northern Africa, one of the Barbary States, is bounded N and E by the Mediterranean Sea, SE by Tripoli, S and SW by the Sahara, and W by the department of Constantine, in Algeria. Ras el-Ahbad, or Cape Blanc, its northernmost point (lat. 37° 20' N.) is likewise the northernmost projection of the African continent. Area, about 51,000 sq. m. In the coast are three great indentations forming the Bay of Tunis on the N and the Gulfs of Hammamet and Gabes, or the Lesser Syrtes, on the E Tunis, which corresponds in greater part to the ancient Roman province of Africa (Africa in the narrower sense), and which still bears the native name of Ifrigia, is physiographically divided into four regions: the tell, or the well watered and well-wooded mountain area that lies N of the Mejerda River and extends from the Algerian frontier to the Gulf of Tunis; the sebkha, a somewhat less fertile and less well watered area, which forms the eastern littoral between Cape Bas and Tripoli; the central plateau or series of table-lands, of about 3000 feet general elevation, extending southward from the Mejerda to about lat. 34° 30' and including within its limits the plain of Kairuan and the Saharan tract, containing the great Shott Kebir (or Jerid), which is now more generally in the condition of a dried-out salt basin. In the Saharan region is the true Bled-el Jerid (land of dates) of the Arabs. The mountains of Tunis, whose ramifications extend over a large part of the country are ordinarily considered to be a more or less direct continuation of the Atlas Mountains of Algeria, which enter from that country and proceed almost directly eastward to the eastern coast. They attain an extreme elevation of about 5500 feet, and terminate abruptly at Cape Bon and at other promontories of the E coast, but find their orographic continuations in some of the outlying islands and in the table-lands of southern and western Sicily. The only river of any size is the Mejerda (anc. Bagradas). The floral and faunal characteristics of Tunis in general correspond to those of Algeria, and represent in the main the biotic types of the Mediterranean region of Europe, with a scattering infusion of the true African elements. Of the latter among floral types, may be cited the extensive growths and even forests of date-palms (producing the finest dates of the continent) and the (now rather rare) lion and panther among quadrupeds. The myrtaceous plants are largely developed, and there are still extensive growths of the cork-oak on some of the mountain slopes. The agave grows in cultivated in the steppe-region adjacent to the Sahara. In ancient times Tunis was one of the granaries of Rome and agriculture still continues to be the chief industry of the people. Wheat, barley and oats are the major cereal crops the yield in 1904 having been wheat, 10,518,934 bushels; barley 14,514,424 bushels; and oats, 4,635,496 bushels. A large area is devoted to the cultivation of the olive, which yields olive-oil of the finest quality and in the more favored regions there are beautiful orchards of fruit-trees (almonds, oranges, lemons, shrubs, etc.). Other products are tobacco, cotton, figs, and the grape. The climate is on the whole healthy and agreeable, the intrusive summer heats being tempered by sea-breezes and by copious rainfalls during at least five months of the year (November to April or May). The mineral resources of the country (ores of lead and zinc) have not yet been largely developed, but there are extensive shipments of phosphates from the region about Gafsa. Much salt is obtained from the lakes and mines. The principal domestic animals are sheep, goats, cattle, mules, and camels. On several parts of the coast the fisheries including those of coral, sponge, and tunny are valuable.

The manufactures consist chiefly of woollen fabrics, or finery and Morocco leather, carpets and rugs, matting, embroidery and pottery. Silk-weaving formerly an extensive industry has declined. The population of Tunis is estimated at nearly 2,000,000. It consists of Moors, Berbers, Arabs, Jews, French, Italians, and negroes. Nine-tenths of the inhabitants are Mohammedans. At the close of 1901 the French numbered 39,000 of whom more than one-third were soldiers and sailors. The Italians are nearly twice as numerous as the French. The number of Jews in Tunis is estimated at about 60,000. The ruler of the country bears the title of bey. The government is carried on under the direction of a French resident-general who is minister of foreign affairs and president of the council of ministers. Nearly all the heads of the administrative departments are French and are also the civil governors of the 13 districts into which the country is divided. There is a special department for Tunisian affairs in the French foreign office. The capital is Tunis. There are about 450 miles of steam railway in operation in the regency the chief line being that which connects Bone and Guelma, in Algeria, with the city of Tunis.

Tunis contains many Roman remains notably in the form of aqueducts. One of these, as in ancient times, furnishes the capital with excellent water obtained from Mount Zaghouan (Zagouan 5000 feet high) about 40 miles S of the city of Tunis. Of ancient Carthage, the site of which is about 5 miles ENE of the city of Tunis practically nothing remains beyond the parts of a few fortifications.

History.—This region long constituted the main portion of the dominions of Carthage. The city of Tunis (Tunee) existed in ancient times. In the middle of the second century B.C. the country passed under the dominion of the Romans. It was occupied by the Vandals in the first half of the 8th century A.D., and a century later it was conquered by the Byzantines. The Saracens (Arabs) made themselves masters of it in the second half of the seventh century. They founded the city of Kairwan, which rose to be a great Mohammedan centre. Various Mohammedan dynasties succeeded one another in the Middle Ages. In 1570 Louis IX of France engaged in a disastrous crusade against Tunis. In 1535 Charles V undertook an expedition against the famous corsair Khair-ed-Din (Barbarossa) who had made the city of Tunis the seat of his power. The place fell into the hands of the Christians and an immense number of Christian slaves were liberated. In 1574 Tunis became subject to the sultan of Turkey. The authority of the military governors, called deys (elected by the soldiers) was before long overshadowed by that of the beys, who originally had charge of the collection of taxes and of tribute from the tribes. The beys succeeded one another as hereditary rulers, their dependence upon the Ottomans as sultans amounting to little more than the payment of a regular tribute. The beys of Tunis harassed the Christian nations with their pirates, which continued down to the nineteenth century. The payment of tribute to the sultan ceased in 1571. In 1691 France sent an expedition against Tunis with the ostensible object of chastising the predatory Krumira and compelling the bey to accept a French protectorate.

TUNIS (anc. Tyasse), capital of the French protectorate and regency of Tunis, is situated on the inner side of the shallow Lagoon of Tunis, about 12 miles from the Gulf of Tunis, an inlet of the Mediterranean Sea. Communication between the two bodies of water is made by the narrow Goletta Channel (or Strait) which conducts into a canalized water way excavated in the lagoon and leading directly to the city. The Majorda, which formerly discharged into the Lagoon of Tunis, now finds its way to the sea several miles to the N. Tunis is in lat. $36^{\circ}48'$ N and lon. $10^{\circ}24'$ E. The city is surrounded by walls and defended by a strong out-let, completely commanding the Goletta and by several detached forts in other directions. The streets of the inner or old town are narrow uneven largely unpaved, and dirty. The houses are of stone or brick, generally of mean appearance, consisting only of a single story without exterior windows. Many of the shops and bazaars are well stocked and attractive, although mainly small and the general aspect of the Mohammedan quarters is relieved by a number of mosques and minarets; the splendid Mosque of Imam and the palace of the bey (harem) giving a marked character to this section of the city. The lower new town, or French section the official Tunns-Goletta, is almost entirely European in character with fine hotels, cafés, theatres, churches of various denominations, tramways, etc. Tunis is the seat of a Mohammedan college of a polytechnic school (situated beyond the city limits) and of various scientific and literary associations. Its water-supply is derived largely from Mount Zaghwan (Zagouan) 40 miles to the S. the water being conveyed by an ancient (Roman) aqueduct. The principal manufactures are linen and woolen cloths, red woollen caps, pottery harpuses (mantles) embroidery ordinary and morocco leather various common soap, jewelry and silk. The city is the terminus of a railway to Algiers and of steamship routes to Marseilles, Genoa and other Mediterranean ports. Tunis is situated about 8 miles WSW of the ruins of Carthage. Pop. about 120,000 of whom about 40,000 are European Christians and a nearly equal number Jews the remainder being chiefly Moors, Arabs, and negroes. See Ti-an (regency).

Turin (It. Torino, too-ree'no ana, Augusta Taurinorum) a city of Italy the chief city of Piedmont and the capital of the province of Turin, beautifully situated in a fertile plain surrounded by the Alps, at the confluence of the Dora Riparia with the Po 70 miles WSW of Milan. Lat. of observatory 45° 4' 7" N. lon 7° 41' 8" E. The city is laid out in rectangular streets. The principal thoroughfares are the Via Garibaldi, Via dell'Accademia delle Scienze, Via Cernaia, the broad Corso Vittorio Emanuele II (leading to the square of the same name), and the broad some Via di Po, which leads to the river. On the Piazza Castello, which is in the centre of the city is the Madama palace, a medieval castle. N of the square is the royal palace, which dates from 1646. It contains a remarkable collection of arms and armor. To the S. is the Piazza Carignano, with the Carignano palace, formerly the seat of the Sardinian chamber of deputies (1848-59) and the Italian parliament (1861-65), and now containing natural-history collections. Near by is the palace of the Academy of Sciences, formerly the Jesuit college, dating from 1679. The Palazzo di Città, the town hall was erected in 1688. The Palazzo delle Torri is a very ancient gateway with two medieval towers

Adjoining the royal palace is the cathedral (San Giovanni Battista) which occupies the site of three ancient churches. It dates from the fifteenth century and contains the burial chapel of the dukes of Savoy. La Consolata, a church in the baroque style, built in the seventeenth century has a campanile which originally belonged to an ancient convent (sixteenth century), the Tempio Valdese is a modern Protestant church. Corpus Domini dates from the seventeenth century, the church of San Domenico (with a fine madonna by Guernon) from the fourteenth, the domed Soperge, the royal burial-church, rises on a hill E. of the city commanding a splendid view

Turin is rich in monuments. The most conspicuous is the structure known as the Mele Antonelliana, originally intended as a synagogue but finished by the city in 1859 as a museum (Museo dei Risorgimenti Italiani) in memory of Victor Emmanuel II. The square, tower-like edifice crowned by a gilded statue, is 538 feet in height. The Piazza Vittorio Emanuele II contains another monument to the king the colossal Most Cavour Tunnel monument commemorates the names of the engineers of the work the Crimean monument commemorates the part played by Sardinia as the ally of England and France against Russia in 1855. The monument to Cavour erected in 1873 is most imposing. Among other monuments are those to Duke Ferdinand of Genoa, Amadeus VI, Victor Amadeus I, King Charles Albert, Garibaldi, and Duke Emmanuel Philibert, one of the most striking of the equestrian statues. The various arcades containing shops are an interesting feature of the city. A number of bridges span the Dora Riparia and the Po the headmost being the Ponte Emanuele I and the Ponte Maria Teresa. The public garden on the left bank of the Po is a favorite open-air resort. It includes a botanical garden and a turreted royal chateau now the home of the polytechnic institute. The royal garden and the Felice gardens are attractively laid out.

Among the educational institutions the university is foremost. The building dates from 1713, its fine late-Renaissance court and the corridors are embellished with numerous statues. The students number about 2700. The national (formerly university) library has about 300 000 volumes. The Museo Civico contains interesting collections of paintings, early sculptures, ceramics etc. the collections of the Academy of Sciences include a museum of Egyptian Greek, and Roman antiquities. The picture-gallery (Pinacoteca) has valuable works of Dutch masters and of the early Italian schools, the collections of the Albertina academy of fine arts are less noteworthy. The arsenal has a remarkably complete collection of ordnance. Turin has a military academy an archiepiscopal seminary an agricultural college an industrial museum and a conservatory of music. The charitable institutions include several large hospitals (one, the Carità providing for 2500 patients) and an institution for the blind Turin is an important industrial centre. Its manufactures include silk and other textiles, machinery, articles of iron and steel porcelain jewelry furniture, pianos, chocolate etc. It is the seat of an archbishop. The city is exposed to piercing winds from the Alps in winter. Mean temperature of January 33° of July, 74° Pop. (communes) in 1881 2,2 832 1901 (communes) 356 054.

Turin rose into importance as the capital of the dominions of the House of Savoy, which were erected in 1720 into the kingdom of Sardinia, and which finally expanded into the kingdom of Italy. The city was the capital of Italy from 1861 to 1865 when the seat of government was removed to Florence. The Imperialists under Prince Eugene won a memorable victory over the French at Turin in 1706

Turkistan, too-k'es-tän a name applied to two regions of Central Asia which have no very precise boundaries and are separated from one another by the great bulwark of the Tien Shan Mountains and their continuation Russian Turkistan the region lying to the W and Chinese (or Eastern) Turkistan the region lying to the E the latter comprising the vast territory of the Chinese Empire that is enclosed between Tibet on the S and Mongolia on the N and which has the Desert of Gobi on the E and the Pamir the Tien Shan and other mountains on the W A part of Turkistan is included in the Afghan dominions See AFHANISTAN

Russian Turkistan (a name that corresponds to its application largely to the now obsolete Independent Tartary and to Turan) comprises in its combined physiographic and political aspect nearly the entire region that is embraced in the provinces (territories) of Samarkand Ferghana, Syr Darya (with Amu-Darya) and Semir'yetsk and the Transcaspian Territory together with the vassal states of Bokhara and Khiva. For administrative purposes there is a general government of Turkistan The major portion of this tract, which extends westward to the Caspian Sea, is in the form of barren or partially cultivated steppes and desert—a region of progressive desiccation, of disappearing waters, of lakes, salines, and swamps, of scanty rainfall and of accentuated summer and winter temperatures With mountain heights towering into perpetual snow in its eastern parts (Ferghana Semir'yetsk) the region drops on the borders of the Caspian Sea to a level of 80-85 feet below the surface of the Mediterranean Sea. The principal waters are the Aral Sea and its two main feeders,—the Amu Darya and Syr Darya, together with their not very important tributaries Lakes Issyk-Kul and Balkash (with its chief tributary the Ili) in the E are by many geographers included within the boundaries of Turkistan The Tchu, a large river that marks off the region on the N from the Kirghiz territory (Akmoinsk) and from the singular Bed-pak dala or 'hunger steppes', was at one time a tributary of the Syr Darya, but is now lost in the sands The steppes of Turkistan which are continued westward into Russia proper present during the greater part of the year a desolate aspect, but during a period of about two months a vigorous and beautiful vegetation of herbs and flowers responds to the vivifying influence of fairly copious rains. Irrigation water-courses especially in the border lands of the Syr Darya, have done much to reclaim what would otherwise be desert, and have brought into extensive fields of wheat, barley, rice, and sugar cane, beautiful orchards of various kinds of fruit vineyards mulberry plantations, melon-gardens etc The range of temperature, measured by the extremes of summer and winter is about 140°—from 115° to —25° The animal life of the region is a composite of European and Asiatic elements, the latter comprising the lion panther and various antelopes The wild bear is still fairly plentiful and there are large drives or herds of wild asses and wild sheep and goats The camel is one of the most serviceable of the domesticated animals Russian Turkistan is traversed by several important caravan routes the significance of which has largely disappeared as the result of the construction of the Transcaspian railway And of this more recently opened railway from Orenburg to Tashkent, the capital of the general government of Turkistan and the most important mart in the region The population consists mainly of Uzbeks Turkomans, Kirghizes Sarts Tajiks and Russians The general government of Turkistan (Samarkand Ferghana Syr Darya, Semir'yetsk, Transcaspian Territory and the Russian part of the Pamir) has an area of about 650,000 sq m, and between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 inhabitants

Chinese Turkistan is comprised between about lat 35° 15' and 45° 40' N and lon 73° 30' and 90° 30' E and constitutes broadly the Chinese province of Sin-tsiang It covers an area of about 580,000 sq m and has a population estimated at about 2,000,000 Physiographically it is divided into two major divisions by the extension into it of the Tien-Shan Mountains,—the basin of the Tarim on the S (the Tien-Shan Kuo Lu of the Chinese, or 'country S of the Tien-Shan'), sometimes also designated Kshangria, and the Dzungaria basin on the N The great Tarim basin, which abuts westward upon the main Tien-Shan Mountains and the Pamir bulwark, and has for its S boundary the Kuen lun and Akyn-Teg ranges, is largely in the form of inhospitable and almost uninhabited desert of continuously moving sand-dunes (which as in the SW region between the Khotan and Kerye rivers have overwhelmed and buried former sites of habitation) and of shallow and shifting lakes The greater part of the region has at an elevation of 5000-4500 feet above sea-level and has most of the inhabited areas and districts near to the bases and on the declivities of the bounding mountains where many fertile tracts are found Close to the foot of the Bogdo-Ola Mountains SE of Turfan, is the remarkable depression of Lukthun which descends to 420 feet below sea-level. The centre of the country forms the basin of the Lop-Nor a lake variable in length and in position, fed from the W by the Tarim and its four great tributaries or arms the Kashgar Yarkand (or Zhetysay) Khotan and Aksu. Its basin is almost wholly a sandy waste. The heat in summer is great. In winter frost and snow are common in the W but are rare in the E. Abundant rains occur at this season in the mountains, but seldom in the lower country where water for irrigation is stored in reservoirs. On the declivities and borders of the mountains, rice, wheat, millet and other grains, pulses, acornum and other oil-seeds, cotton etc are raised in considerable quantities, besides hemp, flax and dye-plants (rapes, indigo, pomegranates and other fruits of southern climates come to great perfection. Mulberry plantations are numerous and much silk is produced. The rearing of live-stock is the chief branch of rural industry. The domestic animals include horses, yaks and other cattle, camels, and sheep. Horses and camels, thought to be in a condition of true wildness are found in herds on the Lop desert-region where the wild ass is also abundant. The ranges of the Tien-Shan are thought to be the native country of the two-humped (or Kashmir) camel. The argali (or wild sheep) is found. Among the carnivora are the tiger, wolf, jackal, lynx and fox. Gold, copper, iron, silver, asbestos, and other minerals are found in various parts of the mountain regions and ammonium and sulphur in great quantities in the districts of the Bogdo-Ola and around Turfan. The true jade (or nephrite) so highly esteemed in China, is found in some of the mountain-gorges traversed by the upper waters of the Yarkand and Khotan and by the Karakash a tributary of the Khotan

The minor Dzungarian basin lying N of the Tien-Shan and Bogdo-Ola Mountains and forming the southern part of the larger region known as Dzungaria, is of much lower elevation than the basin of the Tarim and only exceptionally (barrier the protruding mountains) rises to a level exceeding 1500-2000 feet in many parts, on the other hand, as in the lakes known as Teli Nor and Ebi Nor it falls to 1000 feet and lower See Dzungaria

Chinese Turkistan has an extensive trade chiefly with Kashgar the Russian Empire, China, and Tibet. The great Peking caravan route enters the region near its SE extremity and following a line of oases or wells in a north-every direction reaches Khami (or Khamul) where it divides into a northerly and southerly route the former via Barkul and Kulja, following the northern base of the Tien Shan (and passing into Semir'yetsk), and the latter via Turfan and Aksu, following the southern base of these mountains and ultimately reaching Kashgar and Yarkand. Kashgar is the seat of government and the chief emporium of trade with Russia. Other large marts and centres of population are Yarkand and Khotan

The inhabitants of Chinese Turkistan comprise a number of peoples, mainly of Turkic stock mostly with an infusion of Aryan blood. There are Kirghizes, Kara-Kirghizes, Tarschaks, Uzbeks, Dzungars, Kalmyks, Tajiks etc. With remnants of Aryan peoples in the mountainous parts. The speech of the inhabitants is mostly a Turkic tongue. The prevailing religion is Mohammedanism. This region has been under the dominion of China since the middle of the eighteenth century. From 1863 to 1871, the famous Yakub Bey played an important rôle in Chinese Turkistan as ruler of an independent state, whose capital was Kashgar

Turkish (or Ottoman) Empire (Türk Memleketi).

Osmaniyeh) a state whose dominions comprise portions of Asia, Europe, and Africa. Its capital is Constantinople, situated on the European side of the Bosphorus, the narrow strait connecting the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmora and then with the Mediterranean. The principal portion of the empire is Asiatic Turkey comprising Asia Minor (Anatolia) together with its islands Turkish Armenia, most of Kurdistan Mesopotamia Irak Arabi (the region about the lower Euphrates and Tigris) Syria (with Palestine) and part of Arabia. Turkey in Europe comprises the southern part of the Balkan Peninsula outside of Greece.

The portion of Africa subject to the Sultan of Turkey comprises Tripoli, Yemen and Barca. In addition to the above possessions the Turkish empire includes nominally several regions which figure either as tributary states (states paying annual tribute in money but otherwise independent of the sultan) or as provinces under foreign occupation. The tributary states include the principality of Bulgaria (with Eastern Rumelia) Egypt, and Samos. The regions usually subject to the sultan but under foreign rule are Bosnia and Herzegovina (forming part of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy) Crete (ruled by Prince George of Greece as High Commissioner) and Cyprus (now a British possession).

The dominions actually subject to the Turkish sultan have an aggregate area of about 1,150,000 sq. m.

distributed as follows: Europe, 65,000; Asia, 700,000;

Africa, 490,000. Their population is estimated at about 25,000,000. Including all its dependencies, real or nominal the empire embraces about 1,800,000 sq. m. with about 40,000,000 inhabitants. The Turkish Empire is the leading Mohammedan state in the world, but the Mohammedan subjects of the king of England are far more numerous than those of the sultan. Previous to the last war with Russia (1877-78) Bulgaria, Eastern Rumelia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina constituted integral parts of the Turkish Empire, and Serbia and Rumania were in a measure vassal states. At the close of that struggle a great part of Armenia was ceded to Russia and Cyprus passed virtually under the rule of Britain. Until recently Tunis was a vassal state of Turkey. Previous to 1898 Crete formed an integral part of the Turkish Empire. In the course of the nineteenth century the hold of the sultan upon Egypt was gradually relaxed, so that that country in spite of the annual tribute, can no longer be regarded as a Turkish dependency.

Turkey in Europe is bounded on the N by Serbia, Bulgaria, and Eastern Rumelia on the E by the Black Sea and the Bosphorus on the S by the Sea of Marmora, the Aegean Sea, and Greece and on the W by the Ionian Sea, the Strait of Otranto, and the Adriatic Sea. It embraces Thrace, Macedonia, Old Serbia, and Albania. It comprises the vilayet (or province) of Adrianople (Edirne), part of the vilayet of Constantinople, and the vilayets of Saloniki, Monastir and Kosovo. Part of the vilayet of the Archipelago (islands in the Aegean Sea) is included in it. European Turkey is almost wholly a region of mountains. In the middle portion are the Rhodope Mountains (Despoto-Dagh, Despoto-Planina) and the Perin-Dagh, and at their northern extremities, on the Bulgarian border the Rilo-Dagh. The peaks here have elevations of between 7000 and 9000 feet. In the W. Albania and Old Serbia present a great complex of mountain ranges the highest of which the Sher Dagh has a peak about 10,000 feet high. In the extreme S is Mount Olympus, scarcely less elevated and to the W of this a part of the Pindus. In the extreme E is the Istranja-Dagh. The principal rivers are the Maritza (whose valley presents one of the few plains of considerable extent to be found in European Turkey) the Mesta, Strama, and Vardar, all flowing into the Aegean Sea, and the Drin and Vojussa (Viosa) which flow into the Adriatic. These streams are not navigable with the exception of the Maritza, which is so for a short distance. There are a number of lakes, principally in the W. the largest being Gölbrida, Preshe, and Sontari. The region enjoys on the whole a mild and salubrious climate. The summits are hot and dry. European Turkey contains a large area of cultivable land, but the political and economic conditions and the inadequate means of transportation have hindered agricultural development. Thrace and Macedonia yield bountiful crops of cereals. All the fruits of the temperate zone thrive together with olives and almonds. The vineyards and plum orchards are a great source of riches. Much tobacco is grown and opium is an important crop. Large numbers of cattle (including the buffalo which is extensively used as a draught animal) sheep and goats are reared. The population of European Turkey is estimated at about 8,000,000. It is composed mainly of Turks (Slavs (Serbs and Bulgarians), Albanians, Greeks, Tatars (a Russian or Wallach people), Jews, Armenians, Ierani (descendants of Europeans and Oriental women) and Gypsies. The Turks are concentrated in the eastern part especially in and about Constantinople and Adrianople.

Turkey in Asia, exclusive of Arabia, extends eastward from the Mediterranean Sea to Persia, and reaches in the SE to the head of the Persian Gulf. It is estimated to contain 10,000,000 or 17,000,000 inhabitants. Its principal portion is the great peninsula of Asia Minor between the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora on the N and the Mediterranean on the S. Asia Minor is a region of tablelands walled around by lofty mountain-ranges, which form great buttresses along the coasts except on the deeply indented shores of the Aegean where the descent is more terraced. The principal range is the Taurus on the E with its eastern and western continuations. The interior plateaus are to a great extent arid but interspersed with many productive districts. The overlying mountains in great part forest-clad, present fertile valleys. The W coast is fringed with islands, the largest in the Grecian Archipelago. Among them are Lesbos, Rhodes, Chios, Lemnos, and Samos. The largest river of Asia Minor is the Kizil Irmaç which flows into the Black Sea. The region produces grain, raisins, wine, olives, figs, tobacco, silk, opium, cotton and valonia. Among the domestic animals is the Angora goat. Asia Minor contains the great body of the Turkish people. There are large numbers of Armenians and Greeks. Asia Minor comprises part of the vilayet of Constantinople, the mutasarriflik of Ismid the vilayet of Khodavendikar the mutasarriflik of Bigla, the bulk of the vilayet of the Archipelago the vilayets of Aidin (Smyrna) Koniah Angora, Kastamonu Trebizond, Sivas, and Adana and the sanjak of Marash (part of the vilayet of Aleppo). To the E. of Asia Minor are the lofty mountains and high tablelands and valleys of Armenia and Kurdistan (the land of the Kurds). These regions embrace the vilayets of Mamuret ul Aih, Erzerum, Van, Bitlis, and Diarbekir. From the highlands of Armenia and Kurdistan descend the Euphrates and Tigris, which unite to form the Shat el Arab before pouring their waters into the Persian Gulf. These two great rivers water the extensive plain of Mesopotamia, a region peopled mainly by Arabs. Extending eastward from the shores of the Mediterranean to Mesopotamia is Syria, the western part of which is a region of mountains (Lebanon Anti Libanus, the mountains of Palestine) containing much cultivable land, while the eastern part is to a great extent desert. It is inhabited by Arabs, Arabic speaking descendants of the ancient Syrians, Druses, Franks, Jews, and Turks. Mesopotamia and Syria embrace the vilayets of Bagdad Mosul, and Basra, the mutasarriflik of Sora the vilayets of Syria (Damascus) and Beirut, the bulk of the vilayet of Aleppo, the mutasarrifliks of the Lebanon and of Jerusalem. The portions of Arabia included in the Turkish Empire are a long and extensive strip in the W., stretching along the whole extent of the Red Sea, and a strip of country in the E. extending along the W. shore of the Persian Gulf. The former comprises Hejaz and Yemen; the latter is the region known as El-Hama. Hejaz contains the holy cities of Mecca and Medina. The African dependencies (Tripolitania) comprise the vilayet of Tripoli and the mntemarrilik of Bengasi.

Among the chief exports of Turkey are silks, silk bar, ley, salom, upum, aga, mohair, wool, coffee, hides and skins, olive oil, minerals, carpets, animals, seaams, drugs, theories, fruits, salt fish and sponges. The principal Turkish ports are Constantinople, Salonika, Smyrna, Trebisond, and Beirut. The internal trade is mainly in the hands of the Armenians and Greeks. There are nearly 3000 miles of railway over one-half being in Asiatic Turkey. The manufacturing industry is but little developed; the product for which Turkey is most noted being its carpets.

The government of the Turkish Empire is a despotism. The sultan is the spiritual as well as the temporal head of the state, professing to be the successor of the caliphs. His chief officer is the grand vizier. The Sheikh-ul-Islam provides over ecclesiastical affairs and is at the same time the supreme interpreter of the law which is based upon the teachings of the Koran. The council of the empire (Divan) composed of the grand vizier, the heads of the various ministries, the president of the council of state, and the Sheikh-ul-Islam, meets in the palace of the Sublime Porte. The servants and interpreters of the law and of religion constitute the great body known as the Ulema. The bulk of the land in the Turkish dominions belongs to the sultan and to pious foundations. While Islam is the established religion, the Christian churches and Judaism are tolerated. The Christians number several millions.

The Ottoman or Osmanli Turks belong to the Uralo-Altaic family of nations constituting with the Turkomans, Uzbekas, Tartars, and other kindred peoples the Turko-Tartaric branch of the family. Most closely allied to this division of the Uralo-Altaic stock is the Finno-Ugric branch, to which the Finns and Hungarians (Magyars) belong. The Turks are a well formed race, with fine physiognomy and pleasing address. They are disgusted in their behavior, industrious, honest, frugal, abstemious, hospitable, and brave. They are fanatic in their devotion to Islam and capable of being roused to the perpetration of the most savage atrocities upon their Christian neighbors, whom they despise. Women occupy a degraded position among the Turks. Polygamy is largely confined to the wealthier classes, the ordinary Turk having but a single wife. The Turks are intellectually a highly endowed race and possess an extensive literature. They are little responsive in civilizing influences from without. Corruption permeates the political organism and has blighted the energies of the nation.

At the end of the thirteenth century Orman or Othman laid the foundations of the empire of the Ottoman Turks in Asia Minor. In 1453 the Turks took Constantinople and made it their capital. Their realm was at the height of its power in the middle of the sixteenth century when the sway of the sultan extended into the heart of Hungary and the Khan of the Crimea was subject to his authority while in Africa, Egypt was an integral part of the empire and Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli were Turkish possessions. With the defeat of the Turks before Vienna in 1683 began the break-up of this mighty state. Austria expelled the Turks from Hungary. Russia, in a long series of wars, deprived them of the regions between the mouths of the Danube and the Caucasus and of western Transcaucasia. The Serbians and Greeks rose successfully in the early part of the nineteenth century; the power of the Porte has nearly vanished from Africa, and finally the Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78 deprived Turkey of much of the fairest portion of its territory in Europe.

Tuscany (It. Toscana, too'-ka-nâ) a region embracing the SW part of the N half of Italy bordering on the Mediterranean Sea and bounded on the N by Emilia E by the Marche and Umbria, SE by the compartimento of Rome, and W (in the extreme N) by Liguria. Area, 928 sq. m.

Tuscany formerly a grand-duchy is now a compartimento in the kingdom of Italy and comprises the provinces of Arezzo Florence, Grosseto Leghorn (with the island of Elba) Lucca, Massa e Carrara, Pisa, and Siena. The surface is largely mountainous, the Apennines traversing the country in the N and NE. The portion of the Apennines known as the Apuan Alps attains a height of nearly 6400 feet. The principal river is the Arno, which is joined by nearly all the streams flowing from the SW slopes of the Apennines. Other rivers are the Corna, Ombrone, and Serchio. The canal of Chiasso joins the Arno with the Tiber which rises in the E part of Tuscany. The soil is fertile and the climate, with the exception of the marshy tract (Maremma) along the southern part of the coast, is healthful.

Wine (Chianti and Montepulciano) oil, maize, and raw silk are produced in considerable quantities. The mineral springs of Tuscany are famous. The mineral deposits in clude iron-ore, copper lead mercury borax, and salt. Florence, Leghorn, Pisa, and Pietola are the principal industrial centres.

Tuscany in ancient times was included in Etruria, the principal home of the Etruscans. Among the leading Etruscan cities were Tarquinii Veii, Vulturni (Volturna) (Cusium) (Chiusi) (Cerveteri), Volterra (Volterra), Cortona, Arretinum (Arezzo) and Perusia (Perugia, situated without the borders of Tuscany). The subjugation of the Etruscans by the Romans was completed in the third century B. C. In later times the Romans gave the name of Tuscia to the region. Countess Mathilda of Tuscany (1076-1115) is celebrated in history as a supporter of the papacy. She bequeathed her domains to the papal see, but their possession was disputed by the German emperors. At this time the cities of Tuscany were rising to independence and importance, and the territories in dispute became the property of suzerain but flourishing commonwealths that were to play an important rôle in the affairs of Italy. Pisa was long the most powerful maritime state on the shores of the Mediterranean, maintaining herself against the rising power of Genoa, which finally triumphed over her rival in 1284. By the thirteenth century Florence had become a prosperous and powerful republic. Other important commonwealths were Siena, Lucca, and Arezzo. Before the close of the Middle Ages Florence, under the Medici, was all-powerful in Tuscany whose history is usually merged in that of the Florentine state. Tuscany led Europe in the revival of the arts and letters. The names of Giotto, Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio are intimately associated with the glories of her medieval past. The Tuscan dialect became the literary language of Italy. In 1569 the Florentine dominions were erected into the grand-duchy of Tuscany. In 1737 the Medici dynasty became extinct and the grand duchy passed to Francis Stephen of Lorraine, the husband of Maria Theresa, and from 1744 emperor of Germany. Tuscany continued under the rule of the house of Hapsburg-Lorraine except in the Napoleonic period (during part of which it was ruled by the Bourbon dynasty of Parma as the kingdom of Etruria) down to 1859. In 1860 it was annexed to the dominions of Victor Emmanuel II. to become in 1861 part of the kingdom of Italy.

United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, formerly

Northwest Provinces and Oudh, an administrative province in the N part of British India being the Punjab on the NW Bengal on the SE Central India and Rajput tane on the S and SW and Nepal on the N. A portion of the northern boundary is also formed by Tibet, with the Himalayas as the boundary wall. Area (exclusive of native status) 16, 184 sq in Pop in 1901 47,691,782, of whom nearly six-sevenths were Hindus and nearly all the remainder Mohammedans. The region occupies the upper

Ganges valley and is traversed in almost parallel lines by the Jarna, the Tinges, and the Gogra. The Ibi Gemin Pass, one of the loftiest of the Himalaya passes (20 450 feet) traverses the Tibetan mountain balwark Nanda Devi, near the Nepali frontier and lying close to the sources of the Ganges, rises to 25 500 feet. The United Provinces of parallel of N latitude N of this point it is irregular, following in greater part the median line of the Great Lakes (Superior, Huron, Erie, and Ontario) and the St. Lawrence River which latter it leaves at the 45th parallel of latitude. This parallel forms the northern frontier of the states of New York and Vermont. In the extreme NE one-half of Maine projects into Canada, reaching nearly to the parallel of 47° 30' and abuts against New Brunswick. The northernmost point of the boundary is on the Lake of the Woods, in lat 49° 34' N. In the SE the peninsula of Florida projects nearly 606 miles towards Cuba, washed by the Atlantic on the N and by the Gulf of Mexico on the W and SW with the connecting Strait of Florida washing its E extremity. The other states bordering on the Gulf of Mexico are Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, the last-named extending along the NW and W shore for upward of 375 miles to a point at the mouth of the Rio Grande, which river forms the boundary with Mexico as far as El Paso in about lon 106° 25' W. The southernmost point of the main-land is the extremity of the peninsula of Florida (Cape Sable) in lat 25° 10' N. The country thus lies entirely outside of the tropics. Its easternmost point is the E. extremity of Washington on Me near Eastport, in lon 68° 58' W. the westernmost point is Cape Flattery the NW extremity of the state of Washington in lon 124° 36' W. The length near the 43d parallel of latitude is about 2860 miles and the maximum width measured from the N extremity of Minnesota to the S extremity of Texas is about 1800 miles. In the far NW Alaska approaches to within about 54 miles of the main land of Asia (Kamtschatka) and carries the territorial domain in Point Barrow to lat 71° 23' N and insularly in the westernmost of the (American) Aloutian Islands (Attu Island) to lon 162° 24' W. (For an extended account of this portion of the national domain see ALASKA.) The recently acquired insular possessions comprise Porto Rico, the Philippines, Hawaii, Guam (in the Ladrones) and part of the Samoan Islands. In addition a number of small uninhabited guano islets of the central Pacific Ocean in the Phoenix and Marshall archipelagoes, the American Polynesian, — have carried or carry the American flag.

Area and Population. The land area of the United States proper is 3,800,000 sq m. The adjoining waters have no area of about 55,000 sq m. The area of Alaska is about 570,000 sq m. The insular possessions have a land area of about 125,000 sq m., of which about 115,000 sq m. belong to the Philippines, 6,000 (approximately) to Hawaii and 3,000 to Porto Rico. The total area of the domain of the United States is, therefore, to round numbers 3,710,000 sq m. The population of the United States (Indians on reservations or unlocated not included) in 1900 was 3,225,214; in 1906 3,708,483; in 1910 7,239,681; in 1920 9,683,453; in 1930 12,865,630; in 1940 17,069,453; in 1950 13,191,876; in 1960 31,443,321; to 18 0 (Alaska and Indian Territory not included) 35,356,171; in 1890 (Alaska included, Indian Territory excluded) 66,136,209; in 1896, 62,799,583. The population in 1890 includes of the Indian Territory was 63,797,774. The population of the United States proper and Alaska in 1900 (the date of the last federal census) was 76,146,366 (including soldiers and others abroad to the number of 91,210). The population of the Hawaiian Islands in that year was 154,601. The population of the United States in 1900 not reckoning the possessions acquired from Spain (and Samoa) was, therefore, 76,303,367. Calculating upon the basis of the increase in the period 1890-1900 and taking account of the enormous increase in the immigration since 1900 we may set down the population at the present time (close of 1965) at approximately 85,000,000. The population of Porto Rico in 1899 was 353,343; that of the Philippine Islands in 1902 according to the census then taken 7,635,626. The inhabitants of the United States and its dependencies may, therefore, be estimated to number not far from 94,000,000.

The negro population of the United States at the various Federal censuses has been as follows: 1790 757,203; 1800 1,003,037 1810 1,777,808 1820 3,185,556 1830 2,932,643 1840 3,573,645 1850 3,633,680 1860 4,441,830 1870 4,886,699 1880 6,560,793 1890 7,488,738 1900 8,840,739. It may be set down now (as of 1900) at between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000. Nearly the entire negro population of the United States is found in the region bounded on the E by the Atlantic Ocean on the S by the Gulf of Mexico, on the W by the meridian of 98° W. lon. (passing through the middle of Texas) and on the N by a line drawn from the Atlantic coast at New York city through Cincinnati to the above-mentioned meridian. Within this area are included the so-called Southern States (with the exception of the western half of Texas) the District of Columbia, the Indian Territory (western Missouri), and portions of several other States. The 6 States having the largest negro population in 1880 were Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, and South Carolina, with over 700,000 each, Georgia leading with 1,034,800. Next follow in order Virginia, Louisiana, North Carolina, and Texas (the numbers ranging from 600,000 to 820,000). Then come Tennessee, Arkansas, Kentucky, Maryland, and Florida (489,000 to 230,000). In Mississippi and South Carolina the negroes outnumber the whites. The members of the African race are nearly all descendants of slaves. The seat of the slave-trade in Africa was mainly the intertropical part of the W coast, but many slaves were at one time brought from eastern Africa, and even from Madagascar, where the native population is largely of Malayan stock. The American negro race is, therefore, of a very complex origin, although probably the Mandingo element is most largely represented. There are about 350,000 Indians in the United States exclusive of Alaska.

The following is a table of the areas and populations (1850-1890-1900) of the states and territories of the United States proper

The foreign-born population of the United States in 1900 was 10,400,000. The countries (or regions) of nativity (omitting those represented by less than 50,000 persons) were: Germany 2,667,000; Ireland, 1,618,000; Canada and Newfoundland 1,181,000; England, 843,000; Sweden, 373,000; Italy 404,000; Russia proper (mainly Jews) 430,000; Poland (Russian Poland, Prussian provinces of Posen, Austrian provinces of Galicia, etc.) 383,000 (largely Jews); Norway 337,000; Cisleithan Austria (exclusive of Bohemia, Galicia, etc.) 270,000; Scotland 234,000; Bohemia, 187,000; Denmark 184,000; Hungary 140,000 (Slovaks, Magyars, Jews); Switzerland, 116,000; the Netherlands, 104,000; France, 104,000; Mexico, 103,000; Wales, 94,000; China, 83,000. By far the greater part of the original European settlers of the United States came from the British Isles. In spite of the prodigious immigration from the continent of Europe in the last hundred years, there is hardly a corner of the country in which

English is not the prevailing language. In some districts in Pennsylvania a considerable number of people still use a German dialect, commonly known as Pennsylvania Dutch, closely kindred to that of the upper Rhine districts. The French tongue is the language of many people in Louisiana, and the Spanish language is spoken in parts of New Mexico, Arizona, and the adjacent regions. The later European immigration has been very largely of Irish, German, English, Canadian, Bohemian, Scandinavian, Jews, Italian, Polish, and Slovak. In recent years the largest contingents of immigrants have been furnished by Austria-Hungary, Italy and Russia. The Scandinavian element is particularly strong in the northern part of the Middle Valley and the Slovak in the mining districts of the Middle Atlantic States. The tide of immigration did not assume great dimensions until 1830. It has reached an unprecedented height since 1840; the annual number of arrivals having for some years exceeded 800,000. Free immigration is permitted to all peoples and nations except the Chinese, but the importation of hands to fill contract labor is prohibited, as well as the landing of paupers.

There are no accurate statistics regarding religion in the United States. The great bulk of the population is Protestant. The Catholics are largely represented by the inhabitants of Irish birth or extraction, the Canadians, the people of South German origin and by the Italian Bohemian Polish Slovak, French and Mexican elements in the population. The largest Protestant sects are the Methodists and Baptists. Other numerous ones are the Lutherans, Presbyterians, Disciples of Christ, Episcopalians, and Congregationalists. The population belonging to the Jewish religion exceeds 1,000,000.

At the time of the foundation of the republic the United States comprised 13 states: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. They were commonly divided into 3 groups: the New England states comprising the first 4, the Middle states, comprising the second 4, and the Southern states comprising the last 5. The number of the New England states was subsequently increased to 6 by the admission of Vermont and Maine. The number of Southern states (a designation still in use) was increased by the admission of Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Texas, and West Virginia. Missouri is often included among the Southern states. The designation Middle states in the original sense continued in use until within recent years. It was customary until a comparatively recent time to speak of the states east of the Rocky Mountains not included within these three groups as the Western states. At the present time the states and territories of the United States are officially grouped under 6 divisions: North Atlantic Division, South Atlantic Division, North Central Division, South Central Division, Western Division. The number of states that have been admitted into the Union under the constitution is 38, the first having been Vermont (1791) and the last Utah (1896).

The following cities had a population exceeding 100,000 in 1900:

New York	3,437,000	Providence	173,000
Chicago	1,834,000	Indianapolis	169,000
Philadelphia	1,294,000	Kansas City Mo	164,000
St. Louis	814,000	St. Paul	164,000
Boston	661,000	Rochester	162,000
Baltimore	508,000	Denver	159,000
Cleveland	382,000	Tulsa	132,000
Buffalo	332,000	Albany	130,000
San Francisco	342,000	Columbus	124,500
Cincinnati	326,000	Worcester	118,000
Pittsburg	322,000	Syracuse	118,000
New Orleans	307,000	New Haven	104,000
Detroit	286,000	Paterson	108,000
Milwaukee	248,000	Fall River	106,000
Washington	270,000	St. Joseph	108,000
Newark	246,000	Omaha	102,500
Jersey City	204,000	Los Angeles	102,000
Louisville	204,000	Memphis	102,000
Minneapolis	203,000	Scranton	102,000

Physical Characteristics.—Extending from the parallel of 35° N. of the equator to 49° and from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific, the United States possesses a great diversity of physical aspects, soil, and climate. The country may be conveniently even if not physiographically divided into three parts by the Mississippi River and by the Rocky Mountains: the former being in Minnesota, not far S. of the N. boundary and flowing southward to the Gulf of Mexico, and the latter extending across the greater part of the territory from New Mexico to Canada, and continuing through that region to (or near to) the Arctic Ocean. The valley of the Mississippi in its N. portion on both sides of the river has prairie characteristics, being in some parts quite level but generally rolling. S. of the Missouri on the W. and of the Ohio on the E. the surface is somewhat more varied. There are numerous hilly tracts, while the level reaches are often swampy near the large rivers. The region was formerly liberally timbered, and considerable woodland still remains, but the site of the ancient forest is now largely occupied by agricultural and grazing lands. East of the Mississippi Valley which is sometimes referred to as the Great Central Basin of the United States, and which at St. Louis has an elevation of only 450 feet above the sea, and at St. Paul at the bend of navigation, of 700 ft. extends a band of elevated land, of both plateau and mountain characteristics, which is the Appalachian uplift. It comprises mountains of most ancient and newer construction, whose trend conforms largely to that of the Atlantic coast, and whose extent, in a broken and continuous line, is virtually that from the N. of Maine to Alabama. The highest points of land in the eastern United States are found in the White Mountains of New Hampshire (Mount Washington, 6288 ft.) in the Black Mountains of North Carolina (Black Dome or Mount Mitchell, 6710 ft., the loftiest summit E. of the Rocky Mountains) and in the Tucks (or Smoky) Mountains, on the borders of Tennessee and North Carolina (Mount Guyot and Clingman Dome each about 6600 ft.). Other prominent points are Mount Katahdin, in Maine, 5200 ft. Mount Marcy, in New York, 5344 ft.; Mount Mansfield, in Vermont, 4354 ft.; Slide Mountain in the Catskills, New York, 4265 ft. and the Peaks of Otter in Virginia, 4001 ft. (For the relations of the different mountain-ranges see the article AMERICA and the special notices of the Appalachian, Alleghany, White, Adirondack, Green, Catskill and Black Mountains the Blue Ridge etc.)

The Atlantic coast is rather rugged in the NE. with fjord characteristics in Maine, but southward of New York Bay it is mostly low and flat, and made irregular by many more or less extended inlets (Delaware Bay, Chesapeake Bay, Albemarle and Pamlico sounds) and some remarkable peninsular formations. The eastern and southern coasts together form the most extensive range of low and sandy sea-luna to be found anywhere. At no point on this line south of Long Island is there an elevation exceeding 350 ft. The Gulf coast is somewhat irregular with a large number of bays, some quite small but others large and important; most of them are merely coast- lagoons shut in by sand-spits. Good harbors abound on the Atlantic side while there are many reefs and keys off the Gulf coast. The Pacific coast is generally high and rocky with but few safe harbors. The extensive inlet of Puget Sound in the NW. and the Bay of San Francisco are the principal indentations of the Pacific coast line. Along the New England coast there are a number of coast-islands, of which the largest is Mount Desert in Maine. The largest island on the whole Atlantic coast is Long Island, which belongs to New York. Close to it is Staten Island, which forms part of the city of New York. The sea-islands, noted for their fine cotton, belong to South Carolina and Georgia, and the Florida Keys and the Dry Tortugas to Florida. Most of the other Atlantic and Gulf islands are wave-formed spurs of sand of which Galveston, Matagorda, Brazos, and Padre islands, in Texas are among the most notable. Off the Louisiana coast there are many islets, of which we may mention the Chandeleur group while on the Pacific side are the Santa Barbara and San Juan islands, besides the numerous Alaskan groups.

The eastern division of the country (that E. of the Mississippi) is by far the most populous and wealthy, and includes most of the great manufacturing centres of the land. It is distinguished by the variety of its agricultural products, and contains the great coal-fields and principal iron and copper-deposits of the country as well as the chief stores of petroleum. On the northern borders of this division are the Great Lakes (Superior, Huron, Erie, Ontario and Michigan—the last named entirely within the domain of the United States) and their outlet, the St. Lawrence River. The principal rivers flowing seaward are the Penobscot, Kennebec, Connecticut, Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, Potomac, James, Roanoke, Great Pedee, Savannah, Altamaha, St. John's, Chattahoochee (with the Apalachicola), Alabama (with the Mobile) and Pearl. The drainage into the Mississippi River is mainly through the Ohio, whose chief tributaries, in addition to its head-streams, the Alleghany and Monongahela, are the Great Kanawha, Soloto, Miami, Kentucky, Wabash, Cumberland, and Tennessee. Among the other streams flowing directly into the Mississippi are the Wisconsin, Illinois, and Yazoo.

The second or middle division of the United States, which extends westward from the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains and includes their eastern ranges, or those whose off-flow is directed to the Atlantic basin comprises one of the best farming-regions of the world, while a considerable part of what is not capable of yielding large returns to the husbandman offers the miner rich stores of gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc, and other valuable minerals. A fair quality of coal is abundant in some localities, and rich petroleum-wells have been recently opened in various places. The advantages of this division, in which are included the Great Plains, vast expanses of grass and steppe-country which rise gradually from the E. westward and attain elevations of 5000 and 6000 feet, are materially enhanced by a generally delightful and salubrious climate. The cold of the Dakotas and Montana, as well as the heat of New Mexico and Texas is rendered tolerable by the dryness of the atmosphere. Though still sparsely inhabited, this section is rapidly growing in population. Proceeding from the Mississippi Valley westward indications are soon observed of the proximity of the Rocky Mountain system, though Nebraska and Kansas, and even the Dakotas and Texas in great part, are rather level, with such slight elevarious and depressions as characterize a prairie country. The SW part of Texas, the greater part of New Mexico and Colorado, nearly all of Wyoming, a large part of Idaho, and the W part of Montana are occupied by the main ranges of the Rocky Mountains with the great valleys and cañons and the numerous spurs and shades of that vast system. In this section are located many of the loftiest and most famous summits of the national domain: Blaine Peak in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, Colorado 14,464 (14,396) ft. (the culminating point of the Rocky Mountain system); Pike's Peak in the Front Range of Colorado, 14,163 ft. Long's Peak 14,371 ft.; Mountain of the Holy Cross, 14,006 ft. the volcanic Spanish Peaks, etc. (For a detailed account of the mountain-system of this region see Rocky Mountains.) This median division of the United States is drained by many large rivers, among which, in addition to the Mississippi, are the Rio Grande, on the SW boundary, the Missouri (with its important tributaries the Maria, Milk, Yellowstone, Little Missouri, Cheyenne, Dakota, or James, Niobrara, Big Sioux, Platte, Kansas, and Omaha), the Arkansas, and the Red, the three great western affluents of the Mississippi; the Sabine (and its affluent the Neches), the Trinity, the Brazos, and the Colorado of Texas, flowing into the Gulf of Mexico; the Pease, flowing into the Rio Grande; and the Red River of the North, which forms part of the boundary between North Dakota and Minnesota, and flows N into Canada, discharging into Lake Winnipeg.

The third or western division includes the states and territories of the Pacific slope. With the exception of Camas Prairie in Idaho and a number of less extended prairie tracts, the surface is more or less mountainous throughout, with numerous elevated plateaus, some of them of vast extent. This division presents a variety of soil and climate as great as can be found in the same extent of territory in any other part of the world. The soil in some parts is more suberantly productive than anywhere else in the temperate zone. Vast regions are a desert for lack of rain. There is no more beautiful region upon the globe in the possession of mineral wealth, including gold, silver, copper, lead, quicksilver, etc. The Pacific slope is unrivalled. Besides the Rocky Mountains and the spurs and chains belonging to their system, there are many separate, more or less isolated mountain ranges and an extensive mountain system (the Coast Range) near the coast. The Sierra Nevada, which occupies much of the western portion of the state of California, and is irregularly continued as the Cascade Mountains through Oregon and Washington,—constructively a much more ancient mountain-system than the Rocky Mountains proper—culminates in Mount Whitney probably the loftiest elevation of the United States proper 15 013 (14 993) feet. This we omit as, however, vastly overtopped by the giants of Alaska,—Mount St. Elias 18 998 ft. and Mount McKinley 20 464 ft.—just as the great volcanic peaks of California, Oregon and Washington—Shasta, 14,442 ft. Hood, 11 225 (11 934) ft. Rainier (or Tacoma), 14,526 ft. Baker in eruption as late as 1870 10 837 ft.—are seemingly overtopped by Wrangell, 17 500 (?) ft., in the Copper River region of Alaska. The Salmon River Mountains stretching WNW from the Rocky Mountains to the boundary of Idaho and Oregon nearly connect with the Blue Mountains which lie considerably eastward of the Cascade system. In Nevada and Utah the Humboldt ranges, the Wasatch Mountains, and many minor lines of mountains trend N and S not generally connecting directly with either of the greater mountain systems. They define or lie within what is known as the Great Basin, a vast area of interior drainage, containing the Great Salt Lake the relict of a much more extensive lake of a past period, known to geologists as Lake Bonneville, which had a depth of not less than 1000 ft. Other bodies of water without outlet occupy parts of this same inhospitable and largely arid region. The Olympic Mountains of Washington are properly a continuation of the more southerly Coast Range.

Among the more distinctive physiographic and scenic features of the Pacific region are the lofty plateaus of Arizona and Utah 7000-9000 feet or more in elevation, the deeply-inked alluvial of the Colorado River, the great volcanic plateaus of the Columbia and Snake rivers, the trough of the Yosemite Valley and a portion of the geyser region of the Yellowstone.

Among the great rivers of this division the chief are the Colorado (with its head-streams, the Grand and Green, and its tributaries, the San Juan, Little Colorado, Virginia, and Gila), San Joaquin, Sacramento, Klamath and Columbia (with its affluents, Clarke Fork, Okanogan, Snake, and Willamette). The Columbia River is, with the exception of the Yukon River of Alaska and Canada, the largest river of the American continent discharging into the Pacific Ocean. The Great Salt Lake, Utah, is the largest body of water in this division. At the NW corner, Puget Sound, with Admiralty Inlet, a deep open channel connecting it with the Strait of Juan de Fuca and through this with the Pacific is an important body of water affording Washington commercial facilities of an exceptional character.

The greatest exposed depression of the United States is found in S California, in the region designated the Mohave (or California) Desert, where a portion of the surface sinks to about 200 feet below sea-level.

Geology.—The broader geological features of the United States have been indicated in the consideration of the geology of North America (see AMERICA), and it only remains here to refer to a few of the more distinctive phases which illumine its physiographic relations. Thus, in a superficial survey, one may enumerate the coastal plain of the Atlantic and Gulf borders constructed of seaward-sloping Cretaceous, Tertiary and Post-Tertiary deposits; the highly correlated system of Paleocene rocks, and the more ancient Archean series which built up the Appalachian mountain-ridges, as well as their outer borders and their inner plateaus, with the vast coal and oil-fields and areas of natural gas; the central (or Mississippi) basin also in great part with a Paleocene floor containing coal and gas, and with the root-masses occupying over large areas nearly horizontal positions the great Plains, occupying in part the position of an internal sea which in the Cretaceous period swept up from the Gulf of Mexico nearly or quite to the Arctic Ocean; the large lacustrine areas, of Tertiary age, which adjoin these and are remarkable for the wealth of fossil-remains which they have disclosed; the Rocky Mountain uplift, accomplished in its different stages in the Cretaceous and Tertiary periods, the great Tertiary plateaus of the SW, in which the Colorado and other streams have incised their profound channels; the Great Basin with the remains of its vast Quaternary lake-basins (Bocconville, Lahontan); the Tertiary volcanic plateaus of the Columbia and Snake rivers; the volcanic tracts of the W and SW; the Jurassic core of the Sierra Nevada; and the Tertiary Coast Range. Extensive glacial deposits cover much of the region N of the 36th parallel of latitude and E of the Mississippi River.

The mineral resources of the United States are enormous and comprise most of the economic products that are found anywhere. With the exception of coal, oil, natural gas, and iron which have a very large development in the Appalachian region and in the basin region lying to the W, and of the copper and iron deposits of the Lake Superior region of Michigan and Minnesota, most of the mineral wealth is centered in the Rocky Mountain region and in the states and territories of the Pacific slope. Colorado, California, Montana, and Nevada lead in the production of the precious metals, but there is probably no extensive area traversed by the western mountains which is not metalliferous to the extent of being economically important. The area of the coal-bearing strata of the United States is estimated to be about 350 000 sq. m. of which the Appalachian region comprises upward of 60 000 sq. m. Important deposits of lignite coal occur along the eastern foot of the Rocky Mountains and also among the Pacific coast ranges. (See paragraph under Mineral Wealth.)

An interesting feature in the geology of the United States is furnished by the large numbers of vertebrate remains of generalized and specialized types, which appear in deposits from nearly the most ancient to the Post-Tertiary and many of which throw a most important light upon the doctrine of descent and the origin of particular forms. Among such may be mentioned the theriomorph reptiles of the Permian period; the gigantic dinosaurs of the Jurassic and Cretaceous deposits (Brontosaurus, Atlantosaurus, Mammosaurus, Hadrosaurus, Stegosaurus, Edmontosaurus); the Cretaceous flying reptiles (Pterodactylus), toothed birds of the same era; and the numerous mammalian types of the Tertiary and later period, many of which (Coryphodon, Brontotherium, Uintatherium, Titanotherium, etc.) have seemingly left no modern descendants, while others clearly establish the life-histories of certain groups and the lines of descent of individual types (e.g. Equippus, Orohippus, Miohippus, Phobippus, in the pedigree of the horse). The late-Tertiary and Post-Tertiary deposits have yielded the remains of giant edentates (Mylodon, Megalenys, Megatherium, Morotherium, Oxytropis) whose nearest allies are probably to be sought among the recent edentate types of the South American continent. The mammoth and mastodon were both comparatively recent inhabitants of the region of the United States. Ancest or fossilized remains of man have also been found (California, Florida, etc.) but the degree of their antiquity has not yet been fully established.

Science and Topographic Aspects.—Owing to its vast continental extent and as a result of the manifold types of geological activity which have shaped the structural features of the country, the United States presents a variety of scenery and topographic aspect which is not to be matched in any country of the world. In its almost boundless extent of valley and plain in the magnitude of its traversing mountains, the expanse of its lake-basins, the length and activity of its major water-courses, the profusion of its water-worn cañons and gorges, the vastness of its lava-fields and the majesty of its still ascendant volcanoes, and the wondrous phenomena of geyser eruptions, the region presents a combination of physiognomic aspect the elements of which are elsewhere to be found only in several continents. The Niagara Falls have seemingly their only rival in the Victoria Falls of the Zambesi, in southern Africa; the geysers of the Yellowstone National Park, their only counterparts in the Hot Springs and geyser region of North Island, New Zealand. The trap sheets of the Deccan, in India, can alone be compared with the great volcanic plateau of the Columbia and Snake River regions, while for the Great Lakes a comparison must be sought in the large equatorial and subequatorial basins which lie about the sources of the Nile in Africa. The gorge (or Grand Cañon) of the Colorado, a river channel treasured for two hundred miles or more to a depth of thousands of feet, is a unique feature of the globe, and is not even faintly approached by the gorges of the Indus and Brahmaputra through the Himalayas. The majestic cones of Shasta and Mount Rainier vie in sublimity with Fujiyama of Japan, Olympos of Greece and Ararat of Armenia. The romantic beauty of the Hudson River has justly been compared with that of the Rhine, — the panorama of the Golden Gate with the Bay of Naples. The western United States abounds with Central Asia the claim of having the largest extent of elevated plateau and in the Mississippi basin the country has the largest continuous expanse of cultivated territory on the globe. A minor desert tract, with desert characteristics as well emphasized as in the Sahara or Gobi, occupies a part of southeastern California and some of the adjacent region in Nevada.

With all this variety in its nature, it is yet significant that the United States lacks many of those striking features in its landscape which mark grandeur of scenery elsewhere. Its more massive mountains the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada, despite their numerous peaks rising to 14,000 feet and more, lack, except in localized areas, the distinctive character of the Alps of Europe. The Yosemite Valley with its wonderful El Capitan and the titanic walls that enclose its chasm may claim comparison with the valley of Lauterbrunnen, the buttress of Mount Whitney may be likened to some of the walls of the Dolomites, and the serrated summits of the Sierran Range to the deeply incised summit lines of the Alps and Pyrenees; but these exceptional resemblances only emphasize the dissimilarity in character which is so apparent to the student of form and color. Bearing one or two fairly large ice-fields on the upper slopes of Mount Rainier there are no glaciers of first (one might almost say of second or third) magnitude in the United States proper, and the snow-covering, even on the higher mountain slopes, is generally so light that a number of the snow-capped peaks of 14,000 feet (such as Pike's Peak) are virtually destitute of a snow-cap during a considerable or even the greater part of the summer months.

The eastern mountains of the United States, the Appalachians, from Maine to Alabama, present hardly more than peaceful even if very beautiful scenery. Rising in their highest points (the Black and Lenoir mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee and the White Mountains of New Hampshire), hardly more than 600-1000 feet above the crest of the Jura Mountains, they suggest much in their scenery that belongs to these mountains and to the neighboring Black Forest of Baden. The character of the land slope in parts of the northeastern United States, especially in northern New York (Adirondack region) and the central and northern parts of Maine, are enhanced by a multitude of lakes whose origin is to be traced to the ice of the Glacial Period; but these lakes are not of the Alpine type, deep and crystal with ice-cold plateaus towering above them, but of the subdued character which resembles one more of Windermere, Lemond, Katrine, and other British lakes. Perhaps no lake of Europe lying entirely outside of the Alpine zone and without the boundaries of the Scandinavian peninsula, can compare in beauty with Lake George, Lake Tahoe, on the borders of California and Nevada, is virtually the only lake in the national domain which has a truly Alpine setting.

No sketch of the scenery of the United States could be considered complete without some reference to the physiognomic aspect that is impressed upon it by its vegetal covering, — by the great expanse of deciduous forest that clothes the eastern mountains and the lowlands adjacent to them, the southern forest of pine, spruce, and hemlock that still forms part of the "North Woods," the forest of the so-called cypress-swamps and of the almost unnumberable palm-trees in southern Florida, the waving grass and flower land of the prairie regions, the open "woodland" of dickey cactus and yucca that brings the landscapes of Mexico into Arizona and New Mexico, the sage and mesquite of much of the western table-land, and lastly the groves of sequoias and redwoods of the Sierra Nevada and the Coast Range of California, whose giants, attaining a height of from 250 to 325 feet, are rivalled (and probably surpassed) only by the eucalyptus or blue-gum of the Australian region.

Flora.—The irregularity of isothermal lines in the United States, in connection with the diversity of soils, not only makes it impossible to designate localities adapted to the various branches of agriculture by parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude, but also occasions a certain irregularity in the distribution of the indigenous flora and fauna. Although, considering the great area of the country E. of the Rocky Mountains, the comparative uniformity of its native fauna and flora is remarkable. Many of the plant-species of the Atlantic region are remarkable for an extensive north-and-south range, notwithstanding diversities of climate. The Pacific slope has a distinctly characteristic flora. That of the E. has many eastern Asiatic and some western European analogies. In general terms it may be stated that the flora of the United States comprises nearly all the orders and species of North America, and the plant-life of the country has been considerably enriched by the naturalization of adventitious species. Probably no other country of the temperate zone has a native flora more rich and varied, unless we except eastern Asia, where there are many arctic species of tropical type. This admixture of southern plant-forms has been checked in North America by the highlands of Mexico and by the great southern Gulf, which have hindered the northward migration of southern types. The flora of the Pacific slope includes trees and plants of the greatest variety, from those of tropical or semitropical character and habit to those of cold temperate latitudes, and among them are a number of species and some entire genera peculiar to this part of the globe. Its birches, buckeye, buttonwood cherry, chestnut, maples, oaks, willows, etc. are quite distinct species, and its coniferous trees (Lambert's pine, Douglas's spruce, silver fir) are noted for a size which makes them distinguishable from those of other regions, while the California sequoia, the California laurel, the strawberry tree (madroño) and the superb Monterea arbutus cannot be claimed in the genera met with in other parts of the country. The Sequoia gigantea (or sequoia proper) which has its home among the Sierra Nevada, and the Sequoia sempervirens (or redwood) of the Coast Range, both attain a height of 300 feet and more. The flora of the South Atlantic region includes species of many northern trees, and a considerable number of distinct trees, of which the more remarkable are the Ogeechee orange, Georgia bark, devilwood, catalpa, novet, wild China, and cabbage palmetto. Of the southern species one of the most valuable is the well known live-oak prized for ship-timber and there are numerous important pines and some rarely beautiful magnolias. The region from Virginia and Kentucky northward and east of the Mississippi, has a great number of trees not uncommon in Europe, but many of its species brook elm, maple, oaks, pines, and others, though of the same genera as trees of those designations in Europe, are of distinct species, while there are a goodly number of trees not found in Europe, as the buckeye, hickories, locusts, magnolias, sumachs, tulips, poplars, etc. Among the smaller flora, the buffalo berry laurel (shrub), leatherwood, pawpaw, spice-bush, witch-hazel and some others are distinctly American and there are many of the more desirable plants of Europe, the various blackberries, dogwoods, rhododendrons, sumachs, whortleberries, etc. The flora of southern Florida is closely related to that of the West Indies, but the area of this subtropical flora, with its palmettos and wild-figs, and the cultivated areas of coconut and pine-apple, is small. The intrusion of these southern forms may be recent. There are considerable tracts within the Rocky Mountain system where the alkaline nature of the soil forbids the growth of vegetation and here only the "sage-bush," the "greasewood," a few other chamaedrys, and a few sedges and grasses, are found. But in the vast prairies, where trees are unknown except along the margins of the streams the soil is exceedingly rich and productive and the natural growth of grass is luxuriant.

The forest regions of the country comprise a northern belt of pines, in which the white pine (Pinus strobus) one of the noblest and most valuable of American trees, has naturally a very prominent place, as well as the spruce, hemlock, yellow cedar, hemlock and larch, linden as basswood, black and white ash, and sugar- and other maples, besides birch and elm in several species. Farther south range the hickories and oaks, also the chestnut, tulip-tree, sumatra, cherry magnolia, walnut, red cedar, tupelo, persimmon, plane, poplar, bass, catalpa, and other valuable timber-trees, some of them found as far S as the Gulf of Mexico. Characteristic trees of the southern coast-regions are the long-leaved pine, other species of hard or pitch pine, live-oak, palmetto, and various deciduous trees, among which may be classed the valuable deciduous cypresses (Taxodium). The Alleghany Mountains are generally covered with rich and beautiful forests, northern and southern types commingling in great profusion. The lower Mississippi region and the vicinity of the Red River in its lower course are rich in forest-wealth. The prairie E of the Mississippi, where not undergoing cultivation are largely encroached upon by woodland. The plains E of the Rocky Mountains have naturally only a few cotton-wood-poplar willows, elm, box-elders and hackberries, chiefly along the streams, but the planting of forests in parts of this region has succeeded far beyond expectation. Far to the S occur the Cross-Timbers, extensive ranges of low oak forest. The tough and gnarled mosquito is a characteristic tree throughout a large district in Texas. W of the Rio Grande occur several strictly local arborescent species. The Pacific forest region may be regarded as extending eastward throughout the greater part of the Cordilleran mountain-system. Here the rainfall, except in a limited part of the coast-country is so deficient that vegetation of all kinds has been singularly modified both in the character of its growth and in the species of which it is composed. Throughout this region the scarcity of hard-wood timber has been seriously felt by the settler. From Puget Sound southward for many miles along the coast an abundant rainfall has caused the growth of a marvellously dense and very lofty forest where as almost everywhere else in this region the prevailing growth is made up of coniferous trees. The tallest mast and finest spars known to modern commerce are shipped from this coast. The same forest, extending northward through British Columbia, is found on the islands and main-land of southeastern Alaska, where there is a large amount of timber of good quality. The Pacific coast affords to commerce the highly valuable yellow cedar and red-walnut, as well as great quantities of pine and fir spars and lumber. The commercial supply of white pine formerly came chiefly from the northeastern part of the country especially Pennsylvania and Maine but for some years it has been largely drawn from the central tier of northern states—Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Yellow and other hard pines are cut to a great extent in the Southern Atlantic states in which region they afford vast amounts of tar, turpentine, oil, resin, and other valuable products, known collectively as naval stores. Oak, hickory ash and black walnut, cherry and other valuable hard woods are cut in almost every part of the eastern half of the country. Spruce and hemlock, birch, beech, and maple are shipped chiefly from the northwestern section, but hemlock and beech abound in parts of the Appalachian region far to the southward. In many rural districts the forests supply the principal fuel used. Peat is also locally employed and in some of the treeless districts hay, straw and bar are burned for domestic heating; several ingenious inventions having rendered such unpromising materials very useful for this purpose. The stripping of the country of its noble forests has probably had an unfavorable effect upon the water-supply in some regions, for there can be no reasonable doubt that a dense forest-growth prolongs the storage of water in the earth, and thus tends to prevent river floods and droughts.

Animals.—The fauna of the United States is also very comprehensive, including many species found in other lands, some distinctively American species of genera found elsewhere, and a few essentially American genera. Among the native animals are the bison (or buffalo) now nearly extinct, the Rocky Mountain sheep, the so-called Rocky Mountain goat (a goat-like antelope), the prong horn antelope (the only known antelope with deciduous and forked horns), the moose (or true elk), the caribou (or reindeer), several other species of deer, several species or varieties of bear (including the grizzly bear), the raccoon, cougar (panther or American lion), coon (in the SW), lynx, wolverine, foxes of several species, the weasel, marten, skunk, polecat, otter, muskrat, beaver, muskrat, woodchuck, prairie-dog, marmot, various species of hare, a porcupine, numerous squirrels and gophers, the opossum, armadillo (Texas), and a large number of destructive animals of the rat and mouse family. The jaguar has been found in southern Texas, while the range of the puma formerly extended to Arizona. Among birds are the wild turkey, grouse of several kinds, cranes and herons, a number of species of the pigeon family, the mocking-bird, parrot, several species of humming-bird, many song-thrushes, and other small birds (sparrows, warblers, flycatchers) in great variety, besides many kinds of eagle, falcon, and owl, also buzzards, vultures, flamingoes, ibis, geese, ducks, swans, and other game-birds and water-fowl in many species.

The reptile fauna are largely represented, both in individuals and in specific types, and include the alligator, in the southern waters, a true crocodile on the SE coast of Florida, the poisonous "Gila monster" (or lizard), the horned-toads of the arid regions of the SW; green lizards (or chameleons) of Florida, the venomous rattlesnakes, moccasins and copperheads, and a host of tailed and tail-less amphibians (newts, eels, etc.). The oyster is found more abundantly on the Atlantic coast than in any other part of the world. Among crustaceans, the lobster occupies the first place. It is of a species quite distinct from the European kind.

The fauna of the United States constitutes a part of the Holarctic division of zoogeographers (the Nearctic of an earlier classification) and is thus most intimately connected with that of temperate Eurasia. Parts of Arizona, New Mexico, California, and Texas, and the southern apex of Florida have characteristics which unite or ally their faunas with the faunas of tropical America, and thus form a transition tract.

Climate.—In consequence of the great extent of its territory from S to N, comprising more than twenty-four degrees of latitude, the United States has a great diversity of climate. A remarkable irregularity in the trend of the isothermal lines makes it impossible to give a general and yet definite description of the climate, rainfall, velocity of the winds, or healthiness of the several sections of the country. This irregularity is due to various natural causes, the direct influence of each of which can be understood with some exactness. Among the chief of these are (1) the two great mountain systems crossing the country from S to N not in a direct line, but diverging considerably in the central zone, the Rocky Mountains to the NW, the Appalachians to the NE with numerous spurs and branching chains, especially in the former system; (2) only secondary to the great mountains in their influence upon the climate, rainfall, winds, etc. are the great lakes, with the extended expanse of largely level country northward to the Arctic region, affording ready passage to the icy blasts, which are, however, frequently retarded in the directness of their course by the immense bodies of water breaking the land into islands and peninsulas of most uneven and indirect flow. In the S is a more direct, though not so wide, entrance for southern winds, and in the channel between the lakes in the N and the gulf in the S, extends the broad Mississippi Valley, intersected by the valleys of the Arkansas and Missouri in the W and that of the Ohio in the E, spreading out on both sides into vast prairies. With due caution in understanding the classification as generally not exactly accurate, it may be noted that the 100th meridian of W longitude is a sort of dividing line between two of the climates of the United States, or between two climates of the Atlantic slope. E. of this meridian, the 39th parallel of N latitude may be assumed to be a sort of centre of temperature, with an annual mean of about 44° the temperatures getting perceptibly lower to the N and higher to the S from this line. Between the 100th meridian and the Rocky Mountains the mean temperature of 44° is found much farther N, reaching the region of the upper Missouri. Indeed the isotherm of 44° in crossing from the Atlantic to the Rocky Mountains, intersects every parallel from 35° to 45°, while W of the mountains it sweeps northward so as almost to include the N extremity of Washington. It is worthy of remark that on the Pacific slope the changes of temperature are much more regular than E of the mountains, and there is none of the tendency to sudden rise or fall which characterizes many localities on the Atlantic side, especially in the middle belt between the 36th and 42d parallels. In the S part of California, and in Arizona, the thermometer often indicates a temperature of upward of 100° (perhaps with an absolute extreme of 112°-118° shade temperature in the lower valley of the Colorado and in the region adjoining) but the mean is only 79° while the equable or nearly constant temperature, with gradual rise and fall, makes the heat tolerable and the climate healthful. From the mean of 75° at the S, the temperature of the Pacific slope varies to that of 44° at the N. In the eastern or Atlantic slope the mean in Florida is also about 75° or 77° but in the more northerly regions the temperatures become progressively lower and reach a mean of 55° or 53°. In the South Atlantic states the heated spells of summer are somewhat longer continued than in the Middle Atlantic, but the thermometer seldom rises above 95°, while in the Middle Atlantic states it rises suddenly to 100° or even above and, staying at that point for but a few hours, at most two or three days, falls as suddenly to a temperate summer heat. In the North Atlantic states the thermometer in winter frequently falls several degrees below zero (absolute extreme of about -18° to -33°) and in Minnesota and Dakota actually down to -40° ; but such autumns, except when accompanied by strong winds and blizzard snows, occasion little inconvenience. The rainfall on the Atlantic slope is generally abundant, but not excessive, and is as a rule equally distributed through the year, varying from about 35-38 inches in the N to 50 and 55 inches on the Gulf coast. On the Pacific slope on the other hand, it is periodical, with dry seasons and wet seasons, while within and near the Rocky Mountain system irrigation is very generally requisite to make agriculture remunerative. On the Washington coast the rainfall is in places as high as 80 inches while in the interior Rocky Mountain region the fall is reduced to 14 inches, and even less. In the region of the California Desert and in Death Valley there may be no rain for years at a time.

Of the climate it may be said that sudden changes of temperature are frequent in nearly all parts of the country—less so, however, in the extreme south than elsewhere in general, while the greater part of the Pacific coast has a singularly mild and equable climate.

Mineral Wealth.—In the extent and variety of its mineral resources the United States is by far the most favored region in the world. Its vast coal-fields and inexhaustible deposits of iron yield a product larger than that obtained in any other country. It stands foremost in the annual yield of the precious metals (gold and silver combined) the Transvaal Colony being its only rival in the output of gold, and Mexico alone surpassing it in the output of silver. It contributes more than one-half of the world's supply of copper and is the foremost lead-producing country in its yield of quicksilver. It has no rival except Spain in its stores of petroleum are equalled only by those of Russia. The most productive coal fields are found in the Appalachian region and the Ohio valley. Most of the coal is of the bituminous kind. Nearly all of the anthracite is the product of a small district in the eastern part of Pennsylvania. The quantity of coal mined in the United States in 1903 was over 350,000,000 short tons, of which 64,500,000 tons was anthracite. Pennsylvania is the great coal-mining state, its product being not much less than that of all the other states combined. Next in order come Illinois, West Virginia, Ohio and Alabama. The states W of the Mississippi in which most coal is mined are Iowa and Colorado. The great bulk of the iron mined in the United States comes from the region about Lake Superior. Until a comparatively recent time, Pennsylvania was the great iron-producing state, but its product now is only a small fraction of the total output. Minnesota now occupies the foremost place in the quantity of iron-ore mined. Michigan comes next and Alabama third, Pennsylvania, the chief seat of the iron manufacture, ranking fourth. The quantity of pig iron produced in the United States in 1903 was in round numbers 20,000,000 short tons, valued at $244,300,000. Colorado ranks first in the production of gold, the richest gold field of the United States being that of Cripple Creek and California, which was for many years the leading gold-producing region in the world, now occupies the second position. Much gold is obtained from the Black Hills, on the borders of South Dakota and Wyoming, and from the recently discovered gold-region of Tocopah and Goldfield in Nevada, Utah, Idaho, Arizona, and New Mexico are other gold-producing regions. Gold is also mined in the region of the Appalachian Mountains, in South and North Carolina, and Georgia. Alaska is rich in this metal. The output of gold in the United States (including Alaska) in 1900 was valued at $79,000,000; in 1903, at $73,500,000. Colorado is now the principal silver-producing state in the Union, a position formerly occupied by Nevada, which has fallen to a low rank. Montana, Utah, and Idaho come next in order. The commercial value of the silver mined in 1903 was $39,500,000. The great bulk of the copper mined in the United States is obtained in Montana, Michigan (Lake Superior region) and Arizona. The output in 1903 was 698,000,000 pounds valued at $91,500,000. Lead is mined chiefly in Idaho, Colorado, Utah, Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin. The output in 1903 was 380,000 short tons, valued at $23,500,000. Zinc is mined chiefly in Kansas, Illinois, and Missouri. The output in 1903 was 130,000 short tons valued at $14,700,000. Nearly the whole of the quicksilver is obtained in California. The bulk of the petroleum in the United States is yielded by Ohio, West Virginia, Texas, Pennsylvania, California, and Kansas. The United States has vast riches in natural gas, the yield of which in 1903 was valued at nearly $36,000,000. Salt is an important product of the country, the great bulk of the supply coming from Michigan, New York, Kansas, and Ohio. The output in 1903 was 19,000,000 barrels, valued at over $5,000,000. Phosphate rock, used as a fertilizer, is obtained in great quantities in Florida, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

Agriculture.—The United States as a whole is a land of great fertility, and the different soils and climatic conditions to be found over its vast extent lend themselves to the cultivation of all the agricultural products of the temperate zone and to some of those of the subtropical zone. The basin of the Mississippi, with its bottom lands and its prairie-lands, the Pacific coast-land, and the valley of the Red River of the North, vie with each other in the richness of their soil. The coast-land of the Gulf of Mexico, the region draining into the Great Lakes, the basins of many of the rivers that flow into the Atlantic Ocean and some of the valleys between the ranges of the Appalachian Mountains are highly productive. There is a large section, however, of the United States which is in great part unfit for cultivation by reason of insufficient rainfall. It comprises most of the region between the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains on the E and the Sierra Nevada and Cascade mountains on the W. This arid section embraces about one-third of the area of the country. In it are included Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, Utah most of Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and southern California, a large part of Oregon, Idaho, and Texas, and parts of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas. Wherever irrigation is practicable the soil can generally be made to yield bountiful crops, and numerous districts have been converted by the construction of artificial water-courses (many of which are on a colossal scale) from desert-land into blooming gardens. The area that is capable of being rendered productive in this way constitutes, however, but a small proportion of the total arid section. Most of it is destined to remain unuseful for the cultivation of agricultural products. A large portion of it is capable of affording pasturage to cattle and sheep, vast numbers of which are reared on the plains. There is a great extent of absolute desert.

The two distinctive American crops are Indian corn (maize) and cotton, of each of which the United States produces much more than the rest of the globe combined. The great bulk of the cotton goods manufactured all over the world are made from American cotton. The Indian corn is mostly consumed in the United States, the vast stock raising industry of the country being largely dependent upon it, and great quantities being consumed in the manufacture of glucose, starch, sugar and whiskey. The United States is the largest wheat-producing country in the world. Corn, hay, wheat, cotton, and oats constitute the five leading crops of the United States. Indian corn is the leading crop in regard to the money value of the annual product. Cotton and wheat make up the bulk of the agricultural exports of the United States. Among the other leading productions are potatoes, tobacco, sugar and rice. The United States contains some of the most productive fruit-regions in the world. The bulk of the wheat-crop is raised in the North Central Division of states. The wheat-fields of the valley of the Red River of the North are unequalled in extent and unexceeded in productivity. On the Pacific slope the Great Valley of California is noted for its bountiful wheat-crops. The largest wheat-producing states are Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Ohio, California, and Indiana. Comparatively little wheat is now grown in the region E. of the Appalachian Mountains, and in the region bordering on the Gulf of Mexico the dominance of cotton reduces the cultivation of this cereal to small dimensions. The wheat-crop of the United States in 1902 was 670,000,000 bushels, in 1903, 638,000,000; in 1904, 552,000,000. By far the greater part of the product of Indian corn and oats is contributed by the North-Central states. The region which produces the largest crops of wheat is situated too far N for the cultivation of corn and the climate of the Pacific coast is not suited to this cereal. The largest crops of corn are raised in Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and Indiana. The corn-crop of the United States in 1902 was 2,624,000,000 bushels in 1903, 2,344,000,000; in 1904, 2,487,000,000. Iowa and Illinois rank foremost in the production of oats. The crop of this cereal in the United States in 1902 was 988,000,000 bushels in 1903 784,000,000; in 1904, 892,000,000. Barley is extensively grown in California, Minnesota, Wisconsin and a few other states of the North-Central Division. But little attention is given to rye in the United States as compared with European countries. Buckwheat is an important crop in some states, notably Pennsylvania and New York. Rice is grown in Louisiana, South Carolina, Texas, Georgia, and North Carolina. The cotton-growing region embraces the southeastern section of the United States, extending from the Atlantic Ocean westward (approximately) to the meridian which passes through the middle of Texas. It includes Louisiana, Mis-

Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina (excluding the mountainous section), and part of Texas, Florida, Virginia, Tennessee, Arkansas, Indian Territory and Oklahoma. The principal cotton-growing states are Texas, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama. The cotton-crop of the United States in 1920 was about 7,500,000 bales; in 1921, about 9,500,000; in 1922, upward of 10,500,000; in 1923, about 12,500,000.

The state of New York takes the lead in the cultivation of potatoes. Sweet potatoes are an important crop in the Southern states. Tobacco is grown extensively in Kentucky, North Carolina, Virginia, Wisconsin, Ohio, Tennessee, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Maryland, and New York. The bulk of the crop is produced in Kentucky, North Carolina, and Virginia. The total product in 1923 exceeded 300,000,000 pounds. The cultivation of the sugar-cane in the United States proper is carried on mainly in Louisiana. The beet-sugar industry has assumed considerable dimensions. Sorghum, chiefly used in the manufacture of molasses or syrup, is extensively grown mostly in the Mississippi valley. Hops are an important crop in New York and in the region of the Pacific coast. Large quantities of flax are raised mainly for the seed. The peanut is an important crop in a number of the Southern states. No part of the world produces so great a variety of fruits as the United States. Among the commonest fruits are the apple, pear, cherry, grape, strawberry, blackberry and raspberry. Peaches grow in great abundance in Georgia and other Southern states; is the region of the Great Lakes, in California, and in Delaware. Colorado produces peaches of superior flavor. California raises great quantities of apricots. The most favored home of the pine is the Pacific coast. The grape grows most luxuriantly in California. The wine produced in the United States comes mostly from that state, Ohio, and New York. California produces subtropical fruits in great profusion. They comprise oranges, lemons, olives, figs, and almonds. The orange and pineapple thrive in Florida.

Livestock.—The extent of its corn lands and hay-fields and the boundless grazing-grounds of the prairie and of the plains of the Rocky Mountain region give to the United States an extraordinary wealth in live-stock and enable it to send large quantities of animal food to the markets of the world. Most of the cattle, swine, and horses are reared in the North-Central and South-Central states. In the thinly populated regions of the West the rearing of cattle and sheep occupies a more prominent and characteristic position than elsewhere, the vast ranch-properties in the plains and parks constituting a striking feature in the rural economy of those sections. By far the greatest cattle-raising state is Texas. Horses and mules are bred in great numbers in Kentucky, Missouri and the adjoining states. Sheep-breeding is carried on most extensively on the elevated plains of the Rocky Mountain region and on the Pacific slope. This branch of the pastoral industry plays on the whole a very subordinate part in the United States. Most of the wool used in the country is imported. Slaughtering and beef and pork packing are carried on on a vast scale in Chicago, Cincinnati, Kansas City, St. Joseph, St. Louis, and Peoria.

Fisheries.—The fisheries of the United States are mainly carried on on the Newfoundland and Labrador coasts and near the shores of the eastern provinces of Canada. There are also large and growing fisheries on the Alaskan shores, and the waters of that region are thought to be richer in fish than those of any other part of the world. Local fisheries are carried on on all the sea-coasts. The fisheries of the Great Lakes are also highly important. Salmon is extensively taken in many of the streams of the Pacific slope. The shad and herring are important anadromous fishes of the rivers of the Atlantic slope. The menhaden-fisheries afford much oil and fish-guano. The whale-fishery in which American enterprises formerly took the first place, is now comparatively unimportant. The fur-seal and sea-otter are largely captured for their valuable furs, chiefly in the waters of Alaska. Belukvid, in Alaska, is the chief seat of the sea-otter fishery and the Pribilof Islands, in Bering Sea, of the fur-seal business. Seal furs of excellent quality, but of another species, are also collected, principally by American seamen, in the remote Antarctic tracts.

Manufactures.—The United States has risen to the position of the foremost manufacturing country of the world. With respect to the value of its manufactured products in relation to the number of inhabitants, it is however, considerably behind Great Britain. There the agricultural interests have shrunk to small dimensions by the side of the manufacturing interests, whereas in the United States the former are still about on a parity with the latter. The manufacturers of the United States in the nineteenth century stepped at a prodigious rate as compared with the products of the soil, a fact which has been strikingly evidenced in recent years by the changing character of the exports. The supplies of coal and iron (excluding those of any other quarter of the globe) the wealth of forests, the abundance of water-power, the facilities for transportation offered by lakes, rivers, and oceanic waters, and the ever-saving supply of cheap labor due to immigration combined with the resourcefulness, enterprise, and inventive genius of the people, have been the great factors in the extraordinary development of the country as a seat of manufacturing industry. The great bulk of the manufacturing is carried on in the section E. of the meridian of Kansas City and N. of the Ohio and Potomac rivers. This region includes New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and parts of Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri. In recent years important manufacturing interests have been developed in the central and northwestern parts of the Southern states. This section comprises parts of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee. The Pacific slope has also become the seat of considerable manufacturing activity. The leading manufacturing states are New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Ohio and Illinois. The United States is one of the foremost countries of the world in the extent of its textile industry. In the value of its cotton manufactures it is second only to Great Britain. New England is the principal seat of the cotton manufacture. Massachusetts taking the lead, with Fall River and Lowell as the chief centres. This industry has in the last quarter of a century assumed large dimensions in the South (North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama). The woolen-industry in its various branches (including the manufacture of our pants and hats) is barely inferior in importance to the cotton-industry. The states which rank foremost in this field are Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. Philadelphia is one of the leading seats of the carpet manufacture in the world. The United States may almost be said to rival France in the extent of the silk manufacture. Its principal seats are New Jersey and Pennsylvania, the most important centre being Paterson. The production of linen in the United States is still very limited, the country drawing the great bulk of its supplies from Europe. The manufacture of knit goods has recently developed to large proportions, New York and Pennsylvania being especially prominent in this field. The value of the product of the various branches of the textile industry in 1920 was $631,500,000. The manufacture of ready-made clothing is carried on most extensively in the state of New York, the product of New York city far exceeding that of any other city in the world. Other prominent centres of this industry are Rochester, Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Cleveland, and Boston. Troy is noted for the manufacture of shirts and other articles of apparel.

In the production of iron and steel the United States is far in advance of all other countries. The growth of this industry in recent times is unparalleled. The production of steel is between one-third and one-half of the total output of the world. The value of the iron and steel product of Pennsylvania is equal to that of the rest of the United States combined. The Pittsburgh district supplies the great bulk of the output. Ohio comes next to Pennsylvania, with Cleveland, Youngstown and other centres of the industry. Next follow Illinois and Indiana. Foundry and machine-shop products are turned out on a large scale in most of the states in the northern half of the region E. of the Mississippi, Pennsylvania ranking first. The construction of iron and steel ships is carried on most extensively on the Delaware River (at or near Philadelphia, Chester, and Wilmington) and at Cleveland, Newport News, and San Francisco. The battle-ships and armored cruisers are of the most powerful type and many have been built for foreign states. In the construction of great ocean steamers of the swiftest kind the United States still lags behind England and Germany. Nearly all the iron and steel vessels built in the United States are destined for the domestic trade. In the days of wooden ships the American clippers were famed as the most perfect specimens of sailing vessels afloat. Wooden vessels of considerable size are still built in large numbers on the coast of Maine. Nowhere else in the world do iron and steel enter so largely into the construction of buildings as in the United States and a prodigious quantity of metal is consumed in the construction of bridges and in other engineering work. The immense railroad system necessitates a vast consumption of steel for rails. The most powerful locomotives are those constructed in the United States. Philadelphia possesses the most extensive locomotive-works in the world.

Connecticut is the principal seat of the manufacture of small metallic articles of every kind, including hardware, cutter, brake and bristle-worm, needles, pins, and plated-wire. Springfield (Mass.), Hartford and New Haven (Conn.), are noted for their fire-arms. The manufacture of the plane has developed within the last two decades from small beginnings into an important industry. The manufacture of rolling stock for railroads is one of the leading industries of the country. Much of the industrial activity of the North-Central states is devoted to the manufacture of carriages and wagons, agricultural implements and machinery, furniture, and household appliances of every kind. An immense amount of capital is invested in the manufacture of automobiles. The manufacture of electrical apparatus and supplies has assumed prodigious dimensions.

In the tanning industry Pennsylvania is far ahead of any state. Massachusetts leads in the manufacture of boots and shoes, its product in 1900 having been but little short of that of the rest of the country. New York and New Hampshire rank next in importance. The cities of St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Chicago have recently risen to prominence in this branch of industry. The production of rubber boots and shoes has its seat mainly in New England. Paper is made on a larger scale in the United States than in any other country. Most of it is now manufactured from wood pulp mainly spruce, whole forests being cut down to serve this industry. Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Ohio produce about three-fourths of the glass made in the country. New Jersey (Trenton) and Ohio excel in the manufacture of pottery. Among the industries which have been brought to great perfection in recent times is the manufacture of watch-movements. The American prices are unsurpassed and American sewing machines are sent to every part of the globe.

The value of the annual product of the breweries is equivalent to an average of about three dollars per head of the population and that of the distilleries to not much less than half this figure. New York and Pennsylvania take the lead in the value of the malted product. Among the cities noted for their beer are New York, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Newark (N. J.) and Rochester. Peoria occupies the foremost place in the business of distilling. Wine-making occupies a very subordinate position in the United States as compared with the countries of continental Europe. The industry has its chief seats in California, Ohio, and New York. Among the most prominent centres of the tobacco industry (in its various branches) are New York, Philadelphia, Rochester, St. Louis, Richmond, Durham (N. C.), Lynchburg, Petersburg, Louisville, Key West, and Tampa, the last two places being famous for the quality of their cigars. Pennsylvania and New York are the leading states in the manufacture of chemicals and drugs. The state of New York leads in sugar-refining, the largest refineries being in Brooklyn (New York city). Pennsylvania is second with the industry concentrated in great part in Philadelphia. The manufacture of beet-sugar has in recent years grown to large proportions. Minneapolis is the foremost city in the world in the extent of its flour milling and lumber-cutting industries. Large quantities of naval stores are manufactured in the Southern states.

Internal Transportation.—The rivers of the United States afford a great aggregate of navigable inland waters. The United States was the first country in the world to introduce steam-navigation. Of late the relative importance of this means of transportation has greatly declined, owing to the vast extension of the railroad-system. Transportation by canal, which forms such an important feature in the inland commerce of some other countries, plays a small part in the transportation system of the United States, and in fact many of the canals which have been constructed have been abandoned. The principal one is the Erie Canal, extending from Buffalo on Lake Erie to the Hudson River at Albany, which still carries an immense amount of freight. This water way, opened in 1825, was an important factor in establishing the commercial supremacy of New York city.

The number of miles of railroad in the United States in 1830 was 23. In 1845 2915. In 1860 9921. In 1880 30,626. In 1897 52,322. In 1906 97,262. In 1920 166,702. In 1930 194,334. It is now (1935) not far from 220,000 (street railroads not being included in these figures). The mileage of railroads in the United States is equal to that of the whole of Europe and to considerably more than one-third of that of the entire globe. Owing to the great part played by railroads, but little attention has been devoted in the United States to the construction of common roads, with respect to which this country is in a very backward state.

Foreign Commerce.—The foreign trade of the United States is vast, but relatively to the size of the industrial activity of the country it plays a much less important part than is the case in several of the European states. The exports since the beginning of the twentieth century have averaged annually about $1,450,000,000 and the imports about $970,000,000. In the year ending June 30, 1934, the exports amounted to $1,115,000,000 and the imports to $1,117,000,000. In the preceding year (1933-34) the exports were nearly $1,451,000,000. Excluding foreign products, the amount was $1,433,000,000. The main divisions, according to the official classification, were (in round numbers) as follows: products of agriculture, $553,700,000; of manufactures, $442,500,000; of mines $46,000,000; of the forests, $49,000,000; of the fisheries, $3,500,000. The most important item in the exports is raw cotton, the shipments of which amounted in value to $371,000,000. The exports of meat and meat products (beef, pork, bacon, hams, lard, etc.) live animals (mainly cattle) and dairy products amounted to $324,000,000. The value of the breadstuffs was $149,000,000, of iron and steel and manufactures of iron and steel $112,000,000. Mineral oils $79,000,000. Lumber and manufactures of wood, $65,500,000. Copper and manufactures of copper, $38,000,000, tobacco and manufactures of tobacco $30,000,000. Leather and manufactures of leather $24,000,000, coal $28,000,000, agricultural implements $23,000,000, manufactures of cotton $22,500,000. Fruits, $20,500,000. About two-thirds of the exports go to Europe, and of this the British Isles take about half. In the year 1922-23 the exports to the countries which figure most prominently among the recipients of American products were as follows:

British Isles	$724,700,000	Cuba	$21,750,000
Germany	193,550,000	Japan	21,000,000
British North America	120,000,000	China Empire	15,600,000
Netherlands	78,250,000	Spain	17,500,000
France	77,650,000	Denmark	16,150,000
Belgium	47,100,000	Russia	15,500,000
Mexico	48,300,000	Porto Rico	18,000,000
Italy	36,000,000	Argentina Republic	11,500,000
British Africa	53,750,000	Brazil	10,700,000
British Australasia	32,750,000	British West Indies	10,100,000
		Sweden and Norway	10,150,000

Cotton, cereals, animal products, and live animals make up the bulk of the exports to the British Isles. Cotton constitutes the largest item in the exports to Germany and France. The countries and regions from which the United States imports most largely are Great Britain, Germany, France, Brazil, Cuba, the East Indies, British North America, Japan, and Mexico. Among the leading imports are sugar, coffee, hides and skins, manufactures of cotton, raw and manufactured silk, indiarubber and gutta-percha, chemicals, vegetable fibres and textile goods and fabrics made of them, wool and woollen stuffs, precious stones, fruits, tin, tobacco and cigars, and leather and leather goods. In the period immediately preceding the Civil War the United States occupied a position in the carrying trade of the world second only to that of the British Empire. At present it plays a small rôle in this field, and the great bulk of its imports and exports is carried in foreign bottoms.

Government.—The United States is a federal republic composed of self-governing states, each under a republican form of government. The powers of the federal government are defined by a written constitution. All powers not specifically delegated to the United States being reserved to the several states. The constitution of the United States was framed by a convention which assembled in Philadelphia in 1787. The ratification by 9 states, necessary for its adoption, was obtained in the course of that year and the next. The last state to ratify was Rhode Island, in 1790. The first 10 amendments were added almost immediately after the constitution was put into operation. The eleventh amendment followed soon after and the twelfth amendment was adopted in 1805-06. There was no new amendment until 1865 when the one abolishing slavery was adopted. The fourteenth amendment, whose provisions were mainly directed towards the granting of full civil rights to the negroes, was adopted in Congress in 1868 and became part of the constitution in 1869. The fifteenth amendment, absolutely prohibiting the disfranchisement by the states of persons on account of race or color, was adopted in Congress in 1870 and was proclaimed part of the constitution in 1871. Under the constitution the powers of the federal government are distributed among three departments,—the legislative, executive, and judicial. The national legislature (or Congress) consists of a senate and a house of representatives. In the senate the states as such are represented each having 2 members. The senators are chosen by the legislatures of the states. Their term is 6 years, one-third of the body retiring every 2 years. In the house of representatives the people of the several states are represented (each member of the house representing a congressional district) the number of representatives from each state being in proportion to its population. In the amendment made after the census of 1900 the representation

In the lower house of Congress was fixed on the basis of 1 member for approximately 104,000 inhabitants. The following table gives the number of representatives from each state in Congress.

Alabama	8	Nevada	1
Arkansas	7	New Hampshire	2
California	10	New Jersey	10
Colorado	3	New York	27
Connecticut	5	North Carolina	10
Delaware	1	North Dakota	2
Florida	2	Ohio	21
Georgia	11	Oregon	2
Idaho	1	Pennsylvania	23
Illinois	25	Rhode Island	1
Indiana	12	South Carolina	7
Iowa	11	South Dakota	2
Kansas	6	Tennessee	10
Kentucky	11	Texas	12
Louisiana	7	Utah	1
Maine	4	Vermont	2

Massachusetts	14	Washington	8
Michigan	25	West Virginia	5
Minnesota	8	Wisconsin	11
Mississippi	5	Wyoming	1
Missouri	16
Montana	1
Nebraska	6	Total	386

The representatives are chosen for a term of 2 years, the qualifications for voters being the same in each individual state as the qualifications for the electors of the more numerous branch of the state legislature.

With regard to the enactment of laws the two branches of Congress are in general co-ordinate. Revenue bills, however, must originate in the lower house. The senate passes upon all nominations to office made by the president of the United States. All treaties made with foreign powers require ratification by the senate, a two-thirds vote being necessary. In the impeachment of officers of the United States the house of representatives prefers the impeachment and the trial is by the senate. The house of representatives elects its own speaker and the vice president of the United States presides over the senate.

At the head of the executive department of the government is the president, who serves for 4 years. He is chosen by colleges of electors, elected in each state in such manner as the legislature of the state may prescribe. In every state of the Union the electors are now chosen by popular vote. Each state is entitled to as many electors as the number of its representatives and senators in the federal legislature taken together. The election of president has virtually ceased to be indirect, the voters merely registering the popular will. In case no candidate receives a majority of the electoral vote the house of representatives, voting by states, chooses the president from among the three leading candidates. In case of the death of the president or of his disability the office devolves upon the vice-president. This officer is chosen by the same electors as the president. The president, in addition to being the administrative head of the government, is commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States and of the militia when called into the service of the federal government. He has a veto power over all acts and joint resolutions of Congress, but any act or resolution may be passed over his veto by a two-thirds vote in each house. The heads of the various executive departments constitute collectively the cabinet, or body of official advisers of the president. The members of the cabinet are now 9 in number: secretary of state, secretary of the treasury, secretary of war, secretary of the navy, attorney general, postmaster-general, secretary of the interior, secretary of agriculture, and secretary of commerce and labor.

The lowest federal courts are the district courts, a state comprising one or more districts. Next in order come the circuit courts. There are 9 circuits. In each circuit there is also a circuit court of appeals, in which appeals are heard from the district and circuit courts. At the head of the judicial department is the supreme court, consisting of a chief justice and 8 associate justices. There is also a federal court of claims. Federal judges hold office for life.

The regular mode of amendment of the constitution is through the votes of the two houses of Congress, a two-thirds vote of each house being requisite. When an amendment has thus been adopted by Congress, it is submitted to the individual states and if accepted by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states, it becomes part of the constitution. Another mode, by means of a constitutional convention, with ratifying conventions in the individual states, is provided for by the constitution.

By the constitution of the United States each state is guaranteed a republican form of government. In general, the government of the individual states is modeled upon the same principles as that of the United States. The state legislatures are bicameral, the upper house being styled the senate, and the lower house the house of representatives, the assembly, or the house of delegates. The system of electing the heads of the executive departments prevails, and, as a rule, judges are elected their tenure except in a very few of the states, being for a term of years and not for life.

There are large portions of the national domain not considered as states. They comprise the organized territories, the unorganized territories, the District of Columbia, and the insular possessions recently acquired from Spain. The governors of the organized and unorganized territories, as well as the highest judicial officers, are appointed by the president for a term of 4 years. The organized territories are represented in the national legislature by a delegate in the house of representatives who, however, has no vote. They have legislatures elected by the people. The District of Columbia is governed by commissioners appointed by the president, and its citizens have no voice in the administration of their affairs.

Great diversity prevails among the states of the republic with regard to local government, manifested chiefly in the varying relative importance of the county and town (township). The town system is especially characteristic of the New England states, whose local affairs are largely conducted through the town meeting.

In 1901 the maximum number of enlisted men in the United States army was fixed at 100,000. The United States military and naval academies (at West Point and Annapolis) rank among the foremost institutions of their respective classes. Several of the states have institutions where military instruction is given by regular army officers detailed for that purpose.

Colleges and Universities.—Among the most noted or most largely attended universities and colleges for men or for men and women in the United States are the following: In the New England states, Harvard University (Cambridge, Mass.), Yale University (New Haven Conn.), Wesleyan University (Middletown Conn.), Brown University (Providence R. I.), Williams College (Williamstown Mass.), Dartmouth College (Hanover N. H.), Bowdoin College (Brunswick, Me.), Amherst College (Amherst Mass.), Boston University, Tufts College (Medford, Mass.), University of Vermont (Burlington) and Clark University (Worcester, Mass.). In the Middle Atlantic states, Columbia University (New York city), Princeton University (Princeton N. J.), Cornell University (Ithaca, N. Y.), University of Pennsylvania (Philadelphia), New York University (New York city), Lafayette College (Easton Pa.), Hamilton College (Clinton N. Y.), Syracuse University, Rutgers College (New Brunswick N. J.), Lehigh University (South Bethlehem Pa.), Union College (Schenectady N. Y.), the University of Rochester, Colgate University (Hamilton, N. Y.), and Hobart College (Geneva, N. Y.). In the District of Columbia, George Washington (formerly Columbian) University. In the Southern states, Johns Hopkins University (Baltimore, Md.), University of Virginia (Charlottesville), Washington and Lee University (Lexington Va.), William and Mary College (Williamsburg Va.), West Virginia University (Morgantown), South Carolina College (Columbia), University of Georgia (Athens), University of Alabama (Tuscaloosa), Vanderbilt University (Nashville, Tenn.), University of Tennessee (Knoxville), Tulane University (New Orleans, La.), and University of Texas (Austin and Galveston). Upsala, a city of Sweden capital of the län or province of Upsala, 45 miles NW of Stockholm. Lat. of observatory 59° 51' 20" N. lon 17° 37' 34" E. It is situated in a fertile plain on the river Tyra which is spanned by five bridges. The old town lies on the slope of the W bank while the modern quarters rise on the flat E bank. Upsala was in ancient times the commercial metropolis of Sweden and is historically the most interesting town of the kingdom. The university of Upsala, with which the labors of Linnaeus are inseparably associated, was founded in 1477. Its oldest building the Gustavianum dates from the times of Gustavus Adolphus, the new university building was erected in 1877-88. The number of students in 1904 was 1451. The university institutions comprise a library (315,000 volumes) containing the famous Codex Argenteus, a manuscript of the translation of the Gospel by Ulfilas, dating from the fourth century a zoological institute observational mineralogical collections chemical and physical laboratories, etc. The cathedral in the French-Gothic style, was begun in 1230 and finished in 1435 with the exception of the towers, which are modern. The Trifaldigöta Kyrka (Church of the Trinity) is even more ancient than the cathedral but architecturally far less interesting. On an eminence S. of the town commanding a fine view is the Slott, a castle founded by Gustavus Vasa in 1543, but left unfinished. Upsala is the seat of an archbishop who is primate of Sweden. The industries of the town are unimportant. Pop. in 1900, 22,855. Ural (Russ. Ur or Urál) a river of Russia, rises on the eastern slope of the Ural Mountains, in the government of Orenburg, N.E. of Iremel Mountain and flows S. to Orel where, through a break in the Ural chain its course is directed westward to Orenburg and Uralisk. From Uralisk the course is almost due S. to the Caspian Sea, which it enters by several delta-arms, the main arm being a short distance below Guriev. The total length is estimated at about 1400 miles. Its principal affluents are, on the right, the Kizil and Sak-mara and on the left, the Sundeik Or and Iish. The river is but little navigable for navigation, except at high water when craft of considerable size reach Orenburg. For some distance E of Orenburg the Ural forms the boundary between Europe and Asia (the government of Orenburg and the territory of Taysar). The river abounds in fish, particularly towards its mouth where the Ural Comsels have extensive fisheries.

Ural Mountains, a mountain-system of the Russian Empire, forming for the greater part of its extent the physiographic boundary between Europe and Asia. It is almost the only extensive mountain-chain of the globe whose direction is transverse to the continental trend, and which, without co-ordinated parallel lines of other mountains, occupies a subcentral position in a continent. It extends from the borders of the Arctic Ocean, in about lat. 68° 30' N. to a meridional direction to the Ural River, ESE. of Orenburg, whence it is continued by the so-called Mogodshar Mountains to the highland of the Aral Sea or to about lat. 45° 30' N. The mountains thus extend through 23 degrees of latitude (1800 miles). With the islands of Novaya Zembla as a direct orographic continuation (effected by the Fokhol offset) the chain traverses nearly 33 degrees of latitude, or approximately the same distance that marks the extension of the true Rocky Mountains in the North American continent. The Ural Mountains, especially on their western side, consist of a large number of undulating ridges and anticlines, hardly presenting the aspect of true mountains, but on the eastern side directed to the Siberian plain, the mountain characteristics are much more sharply defined and the descent to the lowland ordinarily much more abrupt. A dominating crest-line is most marked in the northern and southern sections of the chain, where several summits attain elevations exceeding 8000 feet. In the central section it is the crossing between Perm and Yekaterinburg, or in the passage of the Trans-siberian railway to Tobolsk the summits have died down so low that mountains as such are barely determinable, recalling the closely parallel features of the Rocky Mountains of the United States immediately S. of the Laramie Hills. The N. and S. trend of the Ural Mountains is mainly along or close to the 60th meridian of E. longitude, where may be said to be the water parting between the basins of the Volga and Petchora on one side and the Ob-Irtish on the other. The Ural River finds a passage through the system in its southern section where a subterranean area marks a separation from the Mogodshar range.

The northern Ural, which may be said to lie between the Arctic waters and the head-streams of the Petchora are of a barren and forbidding aspect, bare on the loftier summits and covered in part with steppe-grass, mosses and lichens on the lower slopes. The forest growth of conifers, birch, beech, etc. which so largely appears on the more southerly sections is almost entirely wanting. In this section of the chain in about lat. 64° N. lies the dominating point of the system, the Tselpis, 5526 (5435) feet. Despite their far northerly extension, no part of the Ural Mountains carries a condition that is attributable to the lack of sufficient precipitation to form glaciers. Only in a few particularly sheltered spots is snow to be seen throughout the summer months. The Ural Mountains, while to some extent a faunal barrier are to themselves hardly sufficient to differ entiate Asiatic and European zoological regions, and the animals by which they are inhabited are on both sides normally those that belong to both the Russian and Siberian regions. Among the more common types are the lynx, wolf, bear, gibbon fox and other fur-bearing quadrupeds, elk, reindeer, numerous rodents, etc. and among birds a large number of the grouse and partridge types. The Ural Mountain region has long been famous for its mineral wealth which includes among metals gold (both in reefs and placers) silver, copper, iron, lead and platinum. The yield of the last-named was at one time very large and important, but lately its production has been very materially reduced. Coal is extensively mined likewise rock-salt. Much the greater part of the raw iron-ore of Russia is furnished by the Ural region and particularly by the governments of Perm, Orenburg, Yekaterinburg, and Volodga. Most of the mining is carried on in the region included between lat. 54° and 60° N. Of the precious or highly prized minerals and rocks for which the region is hardly less famous than for its metals, are the emerald and topaz (from the mine of Murinsk) the diamond, malachite, marble, and Jasper. Among the loftiest summits, in addition to the Tselpis are Koshakorak (or Konyakorak) lat. 68° N. for a long time thought to be the culminating point of the chain 5230 ft. Yama-tau, 5397 ft. Iremel lat. 54° 36' N. 5180 ft. and Donskikh 5018 ft.

Its streets are narrow and crooked. The ducal palace, erected in 1447-52, is the most imposing edifice. The most interesting ecclesiastical structures are the church of Santo Spirito, with some good paintings, San Domenico, with a fine portal, dating from 1449, San Francesco erected in the fourteenth century with a handsome campanile and the Oratorio della Confraternita di San Giovanni Battista, whose walls are covered with paintings by the brothers Severino. The new cathedral dating from 1861, also contains valuable pictures. Urbino is the birth place of Raphael, to whom a fine monument was erected in 1897. The house in which he was born is now the property of the Reale Accademia Raffaello. Urbino has an important university founded in 1071 which is little more than a law-school and an academy of fine arts. The town manufactures silk and cheese. Its majolica ware formerly enjoyed great repute. The town is the seat of an archbishop. At the close of the Middle Ages Urbino was the splendid capital of a ducal ruled by the house of Montefeltro. This dynasty was succeeded by the house of Borgia, to which Pope Julius II. belonged. In 1628 Urbino was annexed to the papal possessions of which it formed part until 1900. Pop. Urubamba, a river of Peru, which (under several names, Quilabamba, Vilcabamba, etc.) traverses the greater part of the department of Cuzco and falls into the Ucayali in about lat. 10° 40' S.

Urubamba, con-lan-se, a town of Peru, department and 28 miles NW. of Cuzco, on the river Urubamba. Altitude, about 9600 feet.

Uruba, a river of Brazil, state of Para joins the Amazon nearly opposite the junction of the Madeira.

Urubá, co-roo-bow', or Urubá de Cima, co-roo-bow' a town of Brazil, in Bahia, on the right bank of the São Francisco, 220 miles W by S. of the city of Bahia.

Urubumema, or Urubumema, co-roo-bow-kwi' a river of Brazil, state of Pará, rises in the Serra Velha, flows S. expands into a lake of its own name, and 20 miles below joins the Amazon about 120 miles NE of Santarém.

Urubá do Baixo, Brazil See Paraná.

Urucaki, co-roo-ká-ee' a river of Brazil state of Piauí, rises in the Serra Gurgueia, flows N., and joins the Paraná nearly opposite the junction of the Alagoas.

Uruguay (Sp. pron. co-roo-gwi') a river of South America, rises in Brazil on the W slope of the cordillera of Santa Catharina and Rio Grande do Sul. It flows NW for about 100 miles, entering the plains of Viçaria, where it is joined on the right by the Felices which name it also bears in this part of its course. After receiving the Uruguay Pita on the left, it proceeds W. and then turns SW being augmented by numerous streams, particularly by the Ibema and the Casimil, the latter separating Brazil from Uruguay. In its remaining course, almost due S. for about 400 miles, it forms the boundary between Uruguay and the Argentine Republic, receiving on the right the Mirina and Guaquechó and on the left the Arroyo Dalmán Querú and the most important of its tributaries the Rio Negro. About 50 miles below the influx of the Rio Negro it is 34° S. and 58° 20' W. it unites with the Paraná to form the Rio de la Plata. The whole course of the Uruguay is about 500 miles. From its mouth to Fray Bentos it is about 4-8 miles wide at the Brazilian frontier its width is 1500 yards. The river is navigable for large vessels to Paysandú and for those of lighter draught to Salto, where occurs the cataract of Salto Chico. Beyond the cataract there are again long stretches of open navigation. The banks of the Uruguay are fertile.

Uruguay, or República Oriental del Uruguay, (co-roo-ah-lá co-roo-gwi') a republic of South America, bounded N. and NE by Brazil, E. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. by the Rio de la Plata, and W. by the Argentine Republic, from which it is separated by the Uruguay River. Lat. 30° to 35° S., long 53° to 58° 20' W. Area 21 750 sq. m. Uruguay is as a whole a vast plain, generally flat towards the Uruguay the Rio de la Plata, and the sea-coast, but broken in the interior by several ridges of moderate elevation (the Cuchilla Grande and the Cuchilla de Haedo) which are composed for the most part of clay-slate, gneiss, and granite and which form the water-sheds of the more important rivers. These are the Rio Negro, by far the largest which rising beyond the Cuchilla de Santa Anna range in Brazil flows SW to its junction with the Uruguay and divides the state into two nearly equal portions: the Yaguarí, in the N.; the Arroyo Dalmán, and Querú also tributaries of the Uruguay the Santa Lucía and San José which unite and fall into the Rio de la Plata, and the Sabellí (or Caballito) and Yaguará (Jaguará) the two most important feeders of the large Lake Mirim which is situated in the NE partly in Brazil and forms an important hydrographical feature of the country. The climate is generally humid, but temperate and healthy in the winter heavy rains and cold winds are prevalent but frosts are unknown. The natural pastures are very extensive and luxuriant. The broad plains, covered with rich turf, and almost destitute of trees, seem admirably adapted to agriculture, but remain for the most part in a state of nature, and are roamed over by immense herds of horses and cattle. These, together with sheep form the chief sources of wealth to the inhabitants supplying large exports of hides, skins, hair, horns, jerked beef, and tallow. The census of animals showed in 1901 6,326 691 head of cattle, 575 361 horses, 17 624,548 sheep, and 22 184 mules. The chief sheep-breeding departamentos are Durazno and Soriano. The wool-clip in 1901 amounted to 37 750 metric tons. Wheat, maize, barley, millet, oats, rye, and flaxseed constitute the chief agricultural crops. The production of wheat in 1900 amounted to 6,291 397 bushels, and of maize to nearly 8,000 000 bushels. The country is adapted to the culture of most of the fruits of temperate climates. The mineral wealth of Uruguay is still largely undeveloped, but gold, silver, copper and lead are known to exist. Gold is mined in the department of Rivera, the product in 1901 having amounted to about 2200 ounces. Montevideo, on the Rio de la Plata is the centre of the foreign trade. There were in 1899 997 miles of railroad in operation. The chief towns are Montevideo, the capital San José Colonia, Paysandú Salto, Fray Bentos, and Santa Rosa.

The population of Uruguay at the close of 1902 was estimated at 572,000, of which number about one-fourth resided in Montevideo. There is a great admixture of the blood of the Indians in that of the natives, descendants of Spaniards and to some extent of Portuguese. The language is Spanish and the religion Roman Catholic. The republic is divided into 19 departamentos: Artigas, Canelones, Cerro Largo, Durazno, Florida, La Colonia, Maldonado, Minas, Montevideo, Paysandú, Rio Negro, Rivera, Salto, San José, Soriano, Tacuaré, Tandubá, and Treinta y Tres. The chief institution of learning is the university of Montevideo. There are many periodicals published in the state. Uruguay is governed by a president elected for a term of 4 years. The legislative power is vested in a senate, whose members (19 in number 1 for each department) are elected by indirect election for a term of 6 years, and a house of representatives, elected for a term of 3 years.

The possession of the region N. of the Rio de la Plata (the Banda Oriental or Eastern Strip, as the Spaniards called it) was long disputed by Spain and Portugal the authority of the former being finally established. The territory formed part of the viceroyalty of Buenos Aires. While Buenos Aires was struggling for independence from the mother country Brazil reasserted the Portuguese claim and for a short time occupied the region, but in 1828 she was compelled to recognize the independence of Uruguay. In 1830 the República Oriental del Uruguay was organized.

Uruguayana, a town and railway station of Brazil near the western extremity of the state of Rio Grande do Sul, on the Uruguay River. Pop. about 4000.

Urmish, co-roo-mee-yá written also Urmish (Pers. Urm ser-mee') a town of Paraná Armenia, in Azerbaijan 12 miles W of Lake Urmial and 64 miles SW of Tatavir. Elevation, 4400 feet. The town sits prepossessing in its architecture, lies in the midst of gardens and orchards. Area of the land-surface, 82 190 sq m. of the appertaining waters, 2780 sq m.
Face of the Country—The great Wasatch range of mountains divides Utah into two somewhat unequal parts, the western (which belongs to the Great Basin) being the smaller but more important division. These mountains are exceedingly wild and picturesque, pierced by many cañons, and sending up many peaks which during most of the year are covered with snow (Provo Peak, 11 000 feet; South Toot 11 240 ft.). W of the Wasatch Mountains the country whose floor level is maintained at a general elevation of 4500-5000 ft., is traversed by many N and S ranges of broken mountains, interspersed with arid plains, valleys, and basins (occasionally lake-bearing) generally having a dreary desert aspect and a somewhat scanty vegetation. Among these mountains are the Ogutiri, Beaver, Parowan, Pah Vant, Tushar (Tushar Mountain, 12 145 ft.), Sevier Iron Lake, Onager, Stansbury Thomas, House, Pahotee or Cedar, Goshute, etc. This great region, barring the extreme NW where there are a few minor streams, tributary to the Snake River has no streams whose waters flow to the ocean, but E of the Wasatch the country has a different character. Here the principal mountains (Uinta, Roan, Pah-Utah etc.) break up into a region of plateaus, bordered by steep escarpments (Book Cliffs, Tarpata, etc.), rather than of ridges, the rivers flowing very generally in deep cañons. Most of this region which lies wholly in the basin of the Colorado River, is utterly sterile; but along the principal streams (Uinta, Green, Grand, San Juan and Colorado) there are some meadow-lands, and where irrigation can be effected there is no difficulty in raising good crops. The singularly domed (naccolite) Henry Mountains (about 11 000 ft.) are in the SE. and the volcanic La Sal (with Mount Peale, 13,000 ft.) in the E. Willow Peak in the Uinta Range, rises to 13 300 ft., Remons Peak to 13,624 ft. and Gilbert Peak to 13,681 ft.
Lakes and Rivers—The principal rivers E. of the Wasatch Mountains have been already named. In the Great Basin we find the Great Salt Lake (which see) a shallow expanse of strong brine, covering 2400 sq m. and receiving the waters of the Bear Weber and Jordan rivers with some smaller streams. It is now merely the remnant of a former (Quaternary) much more extensive lake-basin whose ancient beach-lines are clearly marked as terraces upon the encircling mountains, 900-1000 feet above the present water-level. To this former body of water which drained NW into the Pacific, geologists have given the name of Lake Bonneville. The Jordan discharges the waters of Utah Lake, which contains fresh water abounding in trout. The Sevier River flows into Sevier Lake. Bear Lake is at the border of Idaho. None of the streams of the Great Basin are large, and many of them sink into the earth or are dissipated in vapor before they reach any actual lake-basin. There are in Utah no navigable streams, but a few advent-turns explorers have descended the Colorado and its main tributaries in boats, encountering great perils, and finding their chief reward in the contemplation of some of the grandest and most unique scenery in the world.

Geology and Mineral Wealth.—Archæan and metamorphic rocks form the cores of many of the mountain-ranges, whose periods of elevation were continued into Tertiary times. The Paleozoic series Jura-Trias and Cretaceous are all well represented, the last covering immense areas particularly in the eastern or plateau region and at several points affording beds of coal of economic value. There are also extensive Tertiary regions, which are in some cases not clearly distinguishable from the Cretaceous, and these are also coal-bearing. The plains and valleys of the Great Basin are largely floored with a deep Quaternary detritus deposited in part under ancient lacustrine waters. There are many lava-beds (some old and others comparatively recent) and there are numerous thermal springs. The great river-canyons of the plateau-region cut through and expose every one of the geological strata above named. The principal wealth of Utah must ever consist in her ores of the precious and other metals, gold, silver, lead, copper, iron, etc. The output of the principal metals in 1903 was gold 210 162 fine ounces, valued at $4,344 000; silver 12 304,011 fine ounces, valued at $6 018 131; and copper 35 303 603 pounds. The product of lead is very large. The quantity of coal mined in 1899 was 736 049 short tons and of the asphaltic mineral glauconite, 2500 tons; the coal product in 1903 was 1 681 408 short tons. Beds of kaolin, rock-salt, sulphur, gypsum, etc., are also found. Great Salt Lake affords much nearly pure salt, the quantity obtained from this source in 1904 having been valued at $139 488. The output of salt from the state in 1903 was 212 935 barrels. Excellent building-granite is very abundant.

Climate.—A marked character of the climate throughout the state is the scanty rainfall. The mountain ranges receive much snow in winter and destructive avalanches sometimes occur in the mining cañons; but these mountain-snows which last far into the summer and in some places are perpetual alone render agriculture possible, by supplying water to the rills and gulches. For the most part the climate is very beautiful, agreeably warm in summer and not severe in winter although extremes of temperature have been noted of -30° and 110° . The mean July temperature at Salt Lake City is about 76° ; the mean of January 23° . The annual rainfall ranges from 5 to 18 inches.

Agriculture.—Probably full nine-tenths of the state is naturally sterile, but a large population in the region of the Great Salt Lake has for a long time of years supported itself mainly by agriculture, rendered practicable by irrigation processes. Wherever irrigation can be applied the soil (almost everywhere rich in all the elements of fertility) easily repays the expense. At present wheat, oats, barley, Indian corn, hay, potatoes, dried and other fruit, and dairy products are leading staples. The production in 1903 was wheat, 2 657 106 bushels; corn 169 180 bushels; oats, 918,216 bushels; barley 217 686 bushels; rye 39 302 bushels; potatoes, 649 000 bushels; and hay 349 835 tons. Cattle-raising is practicable on many of the plains where agriculture could not succeed and it is very profitably carried on. The wool industry is one of great importance. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1904 was 14 126 931 pounds.

Manufactures.—The Mormon population have long carried on some manufacturing for the supply of home wants and as a rule only the more indispensable articles have been manufactured in quantity. Recently much capital has been invested in enterprises connected with the mining and reduction of ores, particularly of the ores of lead, the smelting and refining of which is the most important industry of the state. A new and profitable industry in the manufacture of beet-sugar the product in 1900 having been valued at $1 037 356.

Education.—The leading educational institution is the University of Utah located at Salt Lake City. The Salt Lake College and the Salt Lake Collegiate Institute are in the same city. Brigham Young College and the state agricultural college are at Logan. There are state normal schools at Salt Lake City and Cedar City and there is a reformatory at Ogden.

Railroads.—The railroads in 1899 aggregated 1244 miles in 1900, 1692 miles.

Counties, Cities and Towns.—The counties in Utah number 27 as follows: Beaver, Boxelder, Cache, Carbon, Davis, Emery, Garfield, Grand, Iron, Juab, Kane, Millard, Morgan, Piute, Rich, Salt Lake, San Juan, Sanpete, Sevier, Summit, Tooele, Uinta, Utah, Wasatch, Washington, Wayne, and Weber. The principal cities and towns are Salt Lake City (the capital) and the head-quarters of the sect known as Mormons, or Latter-Day Saints (pop. in 1900, 25,331). Ogden, an important railroad centre (16,313), Provo City a manufacturing place and the seat of the Utah Lumber Agency (6165), Logan (4461), Park City, Springville, and Spanish Fork.

Government.—The governor is elected for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of the former being elected for 4 years, and those of the latter for 2 years. Women enjoy the right of suffrage. The state sends 1 representative to the lower house of the national Congress.

Population.—The population in 1880 was 11 380; in 1890, 40 273; in 1870, 85,768 exclusive of the tribal Indians; in 1890, 143,933; in 1900, 207 963 and in 1904, 278,749 (minerals of 2848 Indians settled on reservations). The dominant sect in the population of Utah is that of the Mormons. The characteristic feature of the Mormon community has been the practice of polygamy now rapidly declining.

History.—Utah is a part of the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico in 1848. In the preceding year Brigham Young the head of the Mormons, after their expulsion from Nauvoo, Ill. had come to this then almost utterly unknown region which he afterwards named Deseret. The great body of his followers migrated to the region in 1848. Salt Lake City was founded and a prosperous agricultural community sprang up, which increased rapidly through the vigorous Mormon propaganda carried on in the United States and Europe. In 1850 the territory of Utah was organized Young being appointed governor. In 1857 Young having openly set at defiance the federal authority, President Buchanan sent troops to enforce obedience. In 1888 a compromise was effected, the authority, for practical purposes remaining in the hands of Young and his followers. In 1892 Congress passed a stringent law against polygamy and in 1890 the Mormon church publicly denounced the discontinuance of the practice, which however still persists to some extent. In 1896 Utah was admitted as a state into the Union.

Utah, a county in the north-central part of Utah has an area of 3123 sq. m. It is bounded on the E by the Wasatch Range of mountains, and on the W by the Ogumir Mountains. It is partly irrigated by the Provo and Jordan rivers. Utah Lake (of fresh water) is situated in the county. Gold is mined here. Capital Provo City. Pop. in 1900, 23,768. In 1900 32,456.

Utah, a post-hamlet of Warren co., Ill., 7 miles NW of Galena.

Utah, a post-hamlet of Indiana co., Pa.

Utah Hot Springs, a post-hamlet and resort of Boxelder co., Utah. The bathing point is Ogden.

Utah Lake, a body of fresh water in Utah on Utah, about 10 miles E of the Ogumir Mountains. It is about 24 miles long and 8 miles wide and discharges into the Great Salt Lake through the Jordan River. Altitude, 4900 feet.

Utahville, a post-village of Clearfield co., Pa. on the Pennsylvania R. 15 miles N of Altoona. Pop. 125.

Utakmandi, or Ootekmandi, a town and cantonment of British India, in Madras situated to the N of the Nilgiri Hills 62 miles ENE of Calcutta. Lat. $11^{\circ} 20' N$ Lon. $76^{\circ} 30' E$. It is the head-quarters of the Madras government during the hot season. It has a fine government botanical garden and a government canebrake plantation. Pop. about 15 000.

Utrecht, yu-trikt (Dutch pron. U-trikt, L. Trageturum and Eboracum, Utrechtum), a city of the Netherlands, capital of the province of Utrecht, 23 miles SE. of Amsterdam. Lat. of observatory, 52° 5' N. lon. 5° 7' 56" E. It is situated on the Old Rhine, where the Vecht branches off from it. The town is traversed by two canals, the Oude and Nieuwe Gracht which are spanned by many bridges, and the streets present picturesque aspects. The Gothic cathedral, begun in 1254, long one of the finest churches in Holland, suffered severely in the hurricane of 1674 and the nave has never been rebuilt. The interior is embellished with interesting monuments. Among other ecclesiastical edifices are the late-Gothic church of St. Catharine, the Roman Catholic cathedral, which dates from 1524, and which was restored in 1880; St. Janakerk the oldest church begun in the eleventh century; and the modern St. Willibrordkerk with sumptuous interior decorations. The building of the university, founded in 1636 was recently enlarged by an addition in the Dutch Renaissance style. An interesting secular structure is the Pantheon (or pope's house) erected by the future pope Adrian VI. in 1517. It is now occupied by government offices. The old chateau of Oranien on the Oude Gracht, a Gothic building erected in the fourteenth century has since 1899 been used as a home for the aged. On the site of the old ramparts have arisen pleasant promenades. E. of the town is the Maliebaan, a triple avenue of trees, which leads to the Hoogeiland park. The university of Utrecht has more than 1800 students and a library of 250,000 volumes. The society of arts and sciences and the historical society occupy a high rank. The museum Kunstzinnig contains paintings of early Utrecht masters, the archiepiscopal museum exhibits specimens of Netherlands sacred art, the royal mint contains Dutch coins, medals, etc. The city has a veterinary school, the only one in Holland. Utrecht is the seat of a Catholic archbishop and also of the archbishop of the Old Catholics (Jansemiten). Pop. in 1800 102,085 about one-third Catholics. Utrecht has saw mills, machine-shops, breweries, and printing establishments and manufactures of textiles, cigars, colors, chemicals, organs, etc. It is the seat of an active trade.

The bishopric of Utrecht was founded in Merovingian times at the close of the seventh century. The bishops acquired temporal sway over a considerable district, their principality being included in the Holy Roman (German) Empire. The city of Utrecht, after long conflicts, succeeded in emancipating itself from their rule. Early in the sixteenth century the see and the city became a possession of the Emperor Charles V and were incorporated in the realm of the Netherlands. The Union of Utrecht, a compact between the seven Dutch provinces in revolt against Spain concluded in 1579, established on a firm basis the foundations of the Dutch Republic. The treaty of Utrecht, concluded in 1713, terminated the War of the Spanish Succession. The Bourbon dynasty was seated on the throne of Spain whose crown was born of the Netherlands, Lombardy, Naples, Sicily and Sardinia.

Valencia, vàl-èn-sà (Sp. pro vàl-èn-sà), a region and former kingdom of Spain, on the E. coast, now divided into the provinces of Valencia, Alicante, and Castellón de la Plana. It extends along the Mediterranean Sea between Catalonia on the N and Murcia on the S. Area, 8339 sq m. It is in the main a region of mountains of moderate elevation (the highest summit being about 6000 feet above the sea) between which are fertile and well-cultivated plains, whose productivity depends largely upon artificial irrigation. The chief rivers are the Guadalequivir, Júcar, and Segura. The produce includes grain, wine, rice, sugar and a variety of subtropical fruits. The inhabitants, an industrious people have much Moorish blood in their veins. On the disruption of the caliphate of Cordova, early in the eleventh century Valencia constituted for a time a Mohammedan kingdom. In the thirteenth century it was wrested from the Moors by Aragón. Pop. in 1900 1,587,533.

Valencia, a province of Spain bordering on the Mediterranean Sea. Area, 4150 sq m. Pop. in 1900 606,558. Capital, Valencia.

Valencia (anc. Valentia) a maritime city of Spain, capital of the province of the same name, and residence of the capital general of Valencia (the former kingdom of Valentia) situated in a fertile plain on the Guadalequivir about 2 miles from the sea and 140 miles ESE of Madrid. Valencia, with the tiled domes of its churches and the peculiar bustle of its dark and narrow streets, presents a semi-Oriental appearance. The medieval walls were demolished in 1871 and on their site have arisen wide modern boulevards. The cathedral stands in the heart of the old town where the three most ancient quarters meet. The church of San Martín erected in the fifteenth century as a Gothic structure, has been thoroughly modernized as has been San Andrés, originally a mosque, first restored in the thirteenth century. The latter contains fine pictures by Valencian painters. The splendid cathedral on the imposed site of a temple of Diana, is said to date from 1262 and was finished in 1482. Its octagonal bell-tower and the graceful octagonal ciborium, with beautiful windows, are famous. The interior contains good paintings and interesting relics. The church of San Nicolás, originally a mosque, has valuable frescoes and fine stained-glass windows. The Torre de Serranos the old N gate, flank a structure dating from the fourteenth century the Gothic tracery of which is beautiful. The massive Torre de Cuarte, the W gate, dates from 1444. The old citadel erected under Charles V., is now used as an arsenal and as the residence of the captain-general.

The largest square, the Plaza del Mercado was the scene of medieval tournaments. On it is the Lonja de la Seda (silk exchange) a fine Gothic structure, erected in the fifteenth century and recently restored. A part of the building serves now as a museum of antiquities. The Audiencia, formerly the meeting place of the deputies of the kingdom of Valencia, is a striking Renaissance building of the sixteenth century. Its interior is lavishly decorated. Among the many charming pleasure-grounds are the Glorieta, most attractively laid out early in the last century on the site of the old glacié, the Alameda, the fashionable drive and the botanical garden the finest in Spain rich in subtropical vegetation. The university of Valencia, founded in 1500 is one of the most famous institutions of learning in the kingdom. It has about 1700 students. The Museo Provincial de Pinturas contains more than 1500 paintings, mostly by Valencian masters.

The silk-industry of Valencia, formerly famous, has of late revived. Other manufactures include tobacco, glass (artefacts), fans, valises, linen, and pottery. There are breweries. The city has a large trade, although it has of late lost some of its maritime importance. Its port is Villanueva del Grau, which is a seaside-resort. About 2300 vessels entered the harbor in 1901. Valencia is the seat of an archbishop. Pop. in 1900 213,350.

Valparaiso, val pa-ri so a fortified seaport of Chile, capital of a province of its own name, and the most important commercial town of the western coast of South America, is situated on a large bay on the Pacific Ocean 75 miles WNW of Santiago, with which it is connected by rail. Lat. 33° 1' 50" S. Lon. 71° 4' 45" W. The Bay of Valparaiso, which is well sheltered on three sides, is bounded by an amphitheatre of heights rising to 1000-1700 feet, on the slopes of which a considerable portion of the city is built. On its S. side are the spacious Naveo Malecón and Gran Avenida, from which pass out one of the finest of the city's thoroughfares, the Avenida de las Delicias. The lower central section of the city is constituted by the Alameda with regular and attractive streets, which contains the principal business-houses, the city park the Plaza Victoria, and the national theatre. Northwestward of this section in the quarter known as the Puerto (or Port) are the greater number of the public buildings and the vast warehouses which line the quays and docks. Narrow and crooked streets are still a feature of this part of the city. The newer sections of Valparaiso have an attractive modern appearance, the business quarters being massively built. Valparaiso has various academic and collegiate institutions, a naval school for officers, a marine hydrographic bureau, a museum of natural history etc. Its industrial establishments comprise foundries, railroad and machine-shops, sugar refineries, breweries, distilleries, large bottling works, and factories of various kinds. Among the city's monuments are those to Columbus Wheelwright (who established steamship navigation on the Chilean coast) Thomas Cochran (organizer of the Chilean navy) and Admiral Prat. Elevators connect the lower parts of the city with the villa section on the heights. Pop in 1901 142,383. During the Spanish domination Valparaiso was a place of very little note. In 1819 the population hardly amounted to 5000 souls.

Venedocia, və-nə-dō-shā, a post-village of Van Wert co. Ohio, on the Toledo, St. Louis and Western R., about 30 miles W of Lima. Pop. in 1900, 190.

Venedy, a post-village of Washington co. Ill. on the Leolville and Newville R. 36 miles ESE of St. Louis, Mo. Pop. in 1900, 117.

Vener, vā-nay or Väner (Vänern) a lake in the SW part of Sweden the largest of the lakes of Europe after Ladoga and Onega, between lat. 58° 23' and 59° 23' N. Length 95 miles greatest breadth about 50 miles, near its centre, where two peninsulas, extending into it from the N and from the E, with a group of islands, fairly separate off a SW section into what is known as Dalbo Lake. Area, about 3400 sq. m. average elevation above the sea, 147 feet, the surface-level fluctuating to the extent of several feet. Lake Vener occupies a portion of the great transverse fracture or subidence trough which marks the southern lake-region of Sweden. It receives a number of streams, the largest of which is the Klar (Klar-Nif) emptying into the B end, and discharges into the Skagerrak through the Götta River (Götta-Nif). By means of this stream the various sections of the Götta Canal, Lake Vetter, the Motala River and other waters, a continuous navigable water-way has been established between the Skagerrak and the Baltic Sea. The lake is not particularly noted for its scenery. Greatest depth about 290 feet.

Venezia Portus, the ancient name of Poarsvann. Venersborg, vän-svann a town of Sweden, capital of the län of Kibborg at the SW extremity of Lake Vener at the efflux of the Götta-Nif. Pop. in 1900 6394.

Venetia (It. Venezia, và-ni-tà) a compartmento of the kingdom of Italy in the extreme NE. Area, 9476 sq. m. It comprises the provinces of Belluno, Padova, Rovigo, Treviso, Udine, Venezia, Verona, and Vicenza. Pop. in 1901 3,124,467. This region was inhabited in ancient times by the Veneti whence the name.

Venetia, a post-village of Washington co. Pa. The banking point is Washington. It has coal-mines. Pop. about 500.

Venez', a town of Russia, government and 26 miles ENE of Tula, on the Venzarka. Pop. in 1897 4219.

Venezuela, vén-á-we-lá (Sp. provincia de Venezuela; locally vén-á-wi-lá) a república in the N. part of South America, bounded on the N. by the Caribbean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean, E. by British Guiana, S. by Brazil and Colombia, and W. by Colombia. Area, about 440,000 sq. m. Venezuela is properly divisible into three dominant physiographic regions: 1. the Guiana Highlands, lying E. and E. of the Orinoco River and extending to the Parima and the Páramos mountains, which separate the república from Brazil; 2. the region of the llanos, extensive plains which lie W. and N. of the Orinoco and which slope down gradually from heights of 800 feet in the river and 3. the lofty mountain region of the northwest and north, which is properly a continuation of the Eastern Cordillera of Colombia, and extends with a number of breaks into the Paria Peninsula. The most elevated portion of the Venezuelan Andes is constituted by the Sierra Nevada de Mérida, which culminates in the peaks of Cocha and Colina both about 15,400 ft. in height. Immediately on the coast, in the neighborhood of Caracas, the range is known as the Sierra de Mar or more properly the Cordillera de la Silla ('saddle range') which rises in the Niquiana and the Zulia to about 9000 ft. The Guiana Highlands are still largely unknown but they appear in form a vast plateau sloping northward to the Orinoco and southward to the Amazonian plains, and rising to heights of from 6000 to 11,000 ft. (Mount Icutu). The most noted summit in the region is Bolívar, about 8900 ft. which stands in the extreme SE. angle on the frontier of British Guiana. The llanos, whose surface is composed of detrital material brought down from the neighboring mountain-chains, are of monotonous aspect partially covered with vast prairie forests, and elsewhere open and with park-like scenery. Vast herds of cattle roam over the plains, and there are but few large villages and towns in the far interior. The people of this region the llaneros live chiefly by cattle breeding. A fourth natural region of Venezuela might be recognized in the low alluvial tract which lies W. of the Andes, and is occupied in large part by the brackish shallow lagoons or bay which is generally known as the Lake of Maracaibo. This large body of water the mouth of which is closed by a bar is now rapidly silting up.

The river-system of Venezuela is almost entirely comprised in the Orinoco and its tributaries, the Apure, Aracua, Meta, Ventuari, Guayana and Caroni being the most important of these. The Cayanaul, whose course is partly in the territory disputed with British Guiana, is in the E. The Casiquiare, in the S., connects the Orinoco with the Rio Negro, and thus establishes direct water communication with the Amazon. See Caronco.

The climate of Venezuela is largely zonal. The hot zone extends from sea-level to somewhat over 2000 feet elevation, having a mean annual temperature of 77°. On this follows the temperate zone with one of the most delightful climates in the world extending to 5500 ft. elevation, and having a mean temperature of about 63°. In this zone the temperature rarely falls below 58° and only exceptionally rises above 78°. The cold zone or serra fría is that of the still higher parts of the mountains in the higher portions of which the mean annual temperature descends almost to the freezing point. The flora of Venezuela is exceedingly rich and varied, and comprises the dominant vegetable forms which belong to the South American tropics. Of the more important cultivated products, which constitute the chief natural resources of the country are coffee, cacao, sugar-cane, cotton, cinchona, sarsaparilla, tobacco and indigo. There are various kinds of dye-woods. Other tropical products are rubber, tanga-bana, copala, and vanilla. Venezuela is one of the largest coffee-producing countries of the world, the annual export of the bean being about 30,000 tons. Large quantities of cacao are also exported.

Nearly all the dominant types of the South American mammalian fauna are represented in Venezuela, including various forms of monkeys the jaguar puma, ocelot, sloth, ant-eater tapir and the sea-cow (or manatee), which inhabits the lower Orinoco. Birds are found in large numbers, and are especially abundant about the pools and rivulets of the llanos the flocks or garzas of herons cranes, storks, and ibises being a feature in the landscape of these regions. The serpents include the boa, anaconda, and several extremely venomous types. The rivers teem with edible and other fish, and the turtles are made economically valuable by the prodigious number of eggs which they lay.

The country is rich in metals and other minerals, including gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, sulphur, coal and asphalt. Gold is mined principally in the Yaracuy Territory in the E. the quantity sent from this region in 1899 was 43,315 ounces (in 1894 233,934 ounces). The asphalt deposits belong mainly to the state of Bermúdez, and seemingly bear some relation to those of the island of Trinidad. Petroleum seems to be fairly abundant in some of the western states (Los Andes). Iron is mined with some industry in the region of the llanos. M. sustains E. of the Orinoco delta. An active industry of Venezuela is that of pearl-fishing which is carried on by the natives about the island of Margarita, and which yields an annual product valued at about $100,000.

The roads of Venezuela are still primitive, and most of the traffic of the country is carried on by means of mule-carts and pack-animals. There were in 1899 529 miles of railroad.

The executive power is vested in a president, who is elected for a term of six years by a federal council chosen from among its own members by the congress and the legislature (congress) consists of a senate (representing the individual states) and a house of representatives. The constitution of 1861 recognized 20 states, 1 federal district, 4 territories, and 3 colonies. The states were Apure, Aragua, Barinas, Bermúdez, Barquisimeto, Carabobo, Caracas, Cojedes, Coro, Cumana, Guayana, Maracaibo, Margarita, Maturín, Mérida, Portuguesa, Táchira, Trujillo, and Yaracuy. In 1904, following a readjustment of the domain, the states and territories were as follows: states of Aragua, Bermúdez, Bolívar, Carabobo, Falcón, Guárico, Lara, Mérida, Miranda, Táchira, Trujillo, Zamora, and Zulia; territories, Amazonas, Cúcuta, Colón, Delta Amacuro, and Yurubari; and the Federal District. Pop. in 1904, 2,839,671. The bulk of the inhabitants represent a mixture of Spanish Indian, and negro blood. The pure whites constitute but a small fraction. There are many Indians. The language of the country is Spanish. The Roman Catholic church is the state religion. The chief cities are Caracas (the capital), Valencia, Maracaibo, Barquisimeto, Cumana, Barcelona, Ciudad Bolívar, and Mérida. The principal ports of the república are La Guayra and Puerto Cabello.

History.—Columbus reached the coast of Venezuela in 1498 and in 1499 Ojeda and Vesputi sailed along it. The settlement of the region by the Spaniards was begun early in the sixteenth century. The year 1810 witnessed the beginning of the struggle for independence in Venezuela. In the following year independence was proclaimed. In 1813 Bolívar the leader of the patriots having made his entry into Caracas received the title of Liberator. Venezuela and New Granada were constituted in 1810 the republics of Colombia. The victory of Bolívar and Páez at Carabobo in 1821 put an end to the Spanish power in this part of South America. In 1829 Venezuela constituted itself an independent republic.

Venezuela, Gulf of (also known as the Gulf of Maracaibo) an inlet of the Caribbean Sea, bounded westward by the peninsula of Goajira and eastward by the peninsula of Paraguaná, immediately S. of which is that part of the basin called El Golfo. It extends N. and S. about 75 miles extreme breadth, about 150 miles. It contains several small islands. It communicates on the S. with Lake Maracaibo.

Venice, vén-í-s (It. Venezia và-ni-tà Fr. Vénise, vén-nè-s Ger. Venedig vèn-á-dig L. Venetia) a fortified seaport of Italy capital of the province of its own name, and the seat of a patriarch, situated in the Laguna (lagoons) a shallow bay of the Adriatic, 135 miles E. of Milan and 125 miles NNE of Florence. Lat. of observatory 45° 28' 49" N., lon 12° 21' 12" E. Venice stands on 117 small islands, formed by about 150 canals. A railway viaduct, 2 miles long, connects the city with the mainland. Long sand-dunes (lich), on the outer side of the lagoons, forti-and by networks of masonry, serve as a protection against the sea. Large apices to aid in this work have been constructed. The chief entrances or ship-anchors to the lagoon are the Porto di Lido (in the N.), Porto di Malamocco, and Porto di Chioggia (in the S). The islands upon which the city is built, on pile foundations, communicate with one another by about 440 bridges. The Grand Canal, about 3 miles in length, with an average width of about 200 feet, winds through the city from NW to SE, dividing it into two principal parts. The Giudecca Canal, about a quarter of a mile wide, separates the Giudecca island, on the extreme S. from the city proper. Numerous streets and lanes (calli) for the most part narrow and intricate, render Venice a labyrinth to the pedestrian, but the innumerable gondolas and many little steamboats which traverse the water-ways afford an easy means of intercommunication.

The square of St. Mark (Piazza di San Marco) is the finest and most frequented part of the city. It is enclosed on three sides by most imposing buildings. The palaces on the NE. were formerly the residence of the nine procurators of the republic. The old wing on the N. (Procuratie Vecchie) was erected in 1496-1530; the new or S. wing (Procuratie Nuove) was begun in 1584; the Attio or Nuova Fabbrica, on the W. was built in 1810. Along these three buildings extend arcades with coffee and shops. The former library a superb building, begun by Sanseverino in 1536, now forms, together with the Procuratie Nuove, the royal palace. Between the library and the royal garden is the Zecca or mint, built by Sanseverino in 1534 bounding the W. side of the Piazzetta, an open place which extends from the square of St. Mark to the lagoon. On the E. of the square rises the magnificent church of St. Mark begun in 820, reconstructed after a fire in 1178, and remodelled in the eleventh and later centuries. This cathedral is unrivalled for the splendor of its interior—its wonderful mosaics its gorgeous altar-screen (the Pala d'Oro) its alabaster columns and encaustic marbles. Above the principal portal stand the celebrated four horses in gilded bronze, the only existing specimen of an ancient quadriga. In front of the church are three richly decorated pedestals, erected in 1545 on the E. are two ancient pillars with Greek monograms, which have stood here since 1256. On the N. is the marble sarcophagus of Daniele Manin, president of the republic in 1848-49. Opposite the cathedral to the SW. rises the Campanile, the famous square bell-tower, 323 feet in height, which collapsed on July 14, 1902. It dated back to 893. A new one is being erected in its place. At the E. end of the Procuratie Vecchie stands the clock tower erected in 1496, with two giant figures in bronze on a platform striking the hours on a bell. A lofty gateway leads through the structure to the Mercerie, the principal business quarter. The Palace of the Doge facing the Piazzetta and the lagoon said to have been begun about 814 has been destroyed by fire five times and successively reconstructed on a grander scale. Its magnificent court was begun in 1493. Among its world-famous features are the Sala del Consiglio, a richly ornamented hall of stairs, and the great council hall in which the meetings of the nobles were held. The Bridge of Sighs, constructed in 1596-1605, connects the palace with the public prisons. Close to the palace and near the lagoon are two granite columns, erected in 1180 one bearing the winged lion of St. Mark the other St. Theodore, the patron of the ancient republic, an equestrian.

The Riva degli Schiavoni a handsome quay, extends along the canal San Marco the W. end of which narrows at the Dogana, the custom-house into the Grand Canal the principal artery of traffic whose banks are lined with the palaces of the ancient aristocracy many of them of the greatest architectural and historical renown. Among the most famous are the Palazzo Contarini Tassin, dating from the fourteenth century the Corner della Cà Grande built by Sanseverino in 1532 Raxenolce, in which Browning died; Pisani (fourteenth century) Pesaro Foscari Faresetti (twelfth century) Loredan (of equal antiquity) the Fondaco di Tedesco a German warehouse dating from the thirteenth century now the post-office. Cà Doro, the most striking of the palaces in the Gothic style; Veduggia in the early Renaissance style, one of the finest palaces in Venice and Grimani the masterpiece of Sansovino now the court of appeals.

The most famous of the three bridges spanning the Grand Canal is the Rialto, built in 1588-92, which is lined with numerous shops. Beyond the bridge is the church of San Giacomo di Rialto, the oldest in Venice, said to have been built about 826, recently restored. Among other well-known churches are Santa Maria della Salute, a large domed structure, at the SE. extremity of the Grand Canal erected in 1631-63, with a ceiling adorned by Titian. Madonna dell'Orto, with a beautiful facade and rich in paintings; Santa Giovanni e Paolo, the most imposing church next to St. Mark's, with the tombs of the doges; San Salvatore, containing Titian's "Annunciation" and a beautiful monument by Sansovino. Santa Maria Formosa, one of the oldest churches; Frari (Santa Maria Gloriosa del Frari), one of the largest and most beautiful, begun in the fourteenth century, with the tomb of Titian; the domed San Giorgio Maggiore, begun by Palladio in 1566, Redentore, built by the same master and San Sebastiano, with the tomb of Paul Veronese. San Rocco built in 1496, and the neighboring Scuola di San Rocco, are rich in the works of Tintoretto.

The greatest of the monuments of Venice is the equestrian statue of Bartolommeo Colleoni, the work of Verrocchio (the sixteenth century). Among modern monuments may be mentioned those of Goldeni Tommaseo, Sarpi, Garibaldi, and Victor Emmanuel. A colossal statue of Italy has recently been completed.

Venetian art in its historical development may best be studied in the academy (Accademia di Belle Arti) founded in 1798. The Museo Civico contains, in addition to paintings, valuable architectural sculptural and ethnographical collections. The Arsenal at the E. end of the city founded in 1104, contains a remarkably complete collection of models of ships. In front of the building stand four antique lions, one of them with a Benio inscription. To the S. of the Arsenal are the public gardens, a pretty park 20 acres in extent, laid out by Napoleon in 1807. Venice possesses astronomical and meteorological observatories a royal institute of sciences arts and industries an archaeological museum (in the Palace of the Doges) nautical and technological institutes an Armenian school, and a commercial college. The library of St. Mark's, until 1904 in the Palace of the Doges, but now in the Zecca numbers over 400,000 volumes.

Venice has long been celebrated for its glass-ware (pearls, beads, mirrors, mosaic etc.), made in the city and on the island of Murano to the N. The industry which for many years declined has recently revived. The city is also noted for its lecca, the manufacture of which is carried on principally on the island of Burano to the VE. Other important manufactures are those of silks tapestry furniture, jewelry, artificial flowers, cotton-goods, machinery railway-cars, and torpedoes. Ship-building is carried on in the harbor. Nearly 4000 vessels entered the port in 1902. The city has an extensive trade with the Orient.

The climate of Venice is warm in summer and foggy and humid in winter. Mean annual temperature, 56°. The hygienic conditions have in recent years been improved, and the city has a good water supply, brought through an aqueduct under the lagoon. Pop. in 1881 132,826; in 1901 151,540.

History.—Venice is generally supposed to date from the middle of the fifth century A.D. but nothing definite is known regarding the beginning of its history. It appears to have come into existence as a place of refuge to the inhabitants of the neighboring regions at the time of the great migration of nations. It struggled into the position of a flourishing and independent little commonwealth amid the vicissitudes of domination through which the regions about the head of the Adriatic Sea passed. In 697 the ethos of doge (duke) was instituted. In 997 the doge assumed the title of duke of Venice and Dalmatia. The republic had a leading share in the partition of the Byzantine (Greek) Empire in 1204 and became a great power in the Mediterranean. The middle of the thirteenth century witnessed the beginning of the great wars between the republics of Venice and Genoa. Towards the close of the century Genoa destroyed the naval power of Pisa and henceforth Venice alone was her rival. At one time, in 1379 Genoa appeared to be on the point of crushing her adversary but the long and fierce struggle was finally decided in favor of the proud republic of St. Mark whose maritime power at the close of the Middle Ages overshadowed that of every state in Christendom. In the early part of the fifteenth century the republic added to its possessions in Dalmatia and the hands of the Greeks (part of the Morea, Negropont, Crete, Corfu etc.) great possessions in Italy, including Vicenza, Verona, Padua, Brescia, and Bergamo. The state was now at the height of its power. The trade of Europe with the East was carried on in great part in Venetian vessels. The state was dragged down from its exalted position by the advance of the Turks the armed onslaughts of her Italian neighbors and of foreign invaders, and the change in trade-routes wrought by the discovery of the sea-route to India by Vasco da Gama (1497-98). When the Turks had put an end to the Byzantine Empire by the conquest of Constantinople in 1453, the fate of Venice as a great ruling power in the eastern Mediterranean was sealed, although one important acquisition was made at this time (1473), that of the island of Cyprus. By the middle of the sixteenth century the Turks had swept away the Venetian rule in the Morea and the Archipelago. It was at this time, when the republic had declined from the zenith of its power, that Venetian art reached its culmination. The sixteenth century was the age of Titian, Tintoretto, Paul Veronese, and Palladio. It was now that the Queen of the Adriatic assumed her most political aspect. But the state declined steadily in political power and it lost its hold upon the commerce of the world. Cyprus was conquered by the Turks in 1571 and Crete was lost in 1669. In 1797 the Venetian republic was extinguished by Bonaparte. Most of its dominions were given to Austria. Austria had to surrender them to the French in the treaty of Pressburg in 1805, but recovered them in 1814. In 1810 the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom was constituted. In 1848 the Venetians rose in insurrection against the Austrians and there was a new but short-lived republic of St. Mark. In 1849 Venice was forced to surrender and the Austrian yoke was reimposed. In 1866 Austria was compelled to cede Venetia to Italy.

Vera Cruz, vâ-râ kroos (Mex. Span. pron. vâ-râ kroos) a state of Mexico, bordering on the Gulf of Mexico and bounded by the states of Tamaulipas (on the N.) San Luis Potosí Hidalgo, Puebla, Oaxaca, Chiapas and Tabasco (the last-named on the E.) The Tameo (or Tampico) River forms the northern boundary with Tamaulipas. Area, 29 285 sq m. The state lies entirely within the Tropics. The coast is generally low, level and sandy and indented by several large lagoons—Tampico (in the extreme N.) Tancitarua, and Alvarado—and a number of minor bays. Most of the streams that fall into the Gulf are obstructed by bars at their mouths. The interior after the low belt of seashore is passed rises gradually and becomes clothed with magnificent forests or with pasturage and cultivated fields. The inner boundary is formed by the buttress of the great plateau (with minor ranges, Chichibuita, etc. extending eastward) about which are ranged some of the loftiest volcanic summits of the republic (Orizaba, 18 250 feet. Cofre de Perote). The climate of the state is unhealthy along the coast-border but invigorating on the highlands. The chief products are maize, wheat, tobacco, coffee, cacao, sugar, vanilla, tropical fruits, dye-woods, and rubber. The rubber-forests are very extensive on the lower areas. Córdoba claims one of the finest grades of coffee in the world. Capital Jalapa. Chief ports Vera Cruz and Coahuacoque. Pop in 1900 981 830.

Vera Cruz, a seaport town of Mexico, the chief city of the state of Vera Cruz, on the SW shore of the Gulf of Mexico, 190 miles (direct) E. by S. of the city of Mexico, with which it is connected by rail. Lat 19° 13' N.

The city which is the chief port of the Mexican republic occupies a low area of sand and marsh and has been frequently subject to visitations of yellow fever. Improved sanitation the construction of a sea-wall and various other changes have latterly very materially bettered its condition, and the city is now fairly healthy. Vera Cruz, whose buildings and encircling wall are largely of coral (pedra de mueren) presents a striking appearance from the sea in its numerous domes and cupolas but few of the ecclesiastical edifices are now longer used for the purposes for which they were originally constructed, most of them serving as stores and warehouses. Apart from the old government-house, custom house, and the large hospital of Gutiérrez Zamora, it has hardly any buildings of note, and its central place is less attractive than in most Mexican cities.

From the sea-side the city is measurably defended by the castle of San Juan de Ulúa, built upon an island about half a mile from the shore. The harbor which until a few years ago was hardly more than a mere roadstead between the town and the castle, having neither good anchorages nor sufficient protection from N. winds is now amply protected by moles and breakwaters, and has good wharves and jetty accommodations and facilities for loading, unloading, and transshipment. The exports consist principally of corn, coffee, tobacco, hides and skins, dye-woods, drugs, and vanilla. The city has some manufactures (tobacco, textiles, iron, liquor, pottery) Steamships ply (direct) between Vera Cruz and a large number of the North and South American ports, the West Indies, and the ports of Europe. Vera Cruz was founded at the close of the sixteenth century. It was taken by General Scott in 1847. Pop. in 1900, 25,164. See Yana Leu Old.

Vernacrus, ver'-kroos, a post-town of Wells co. Ind., on the Wabash River 6 miles SE. of Ellettsburg. Pop. in 1900, 190.

Vermont (green mountain) the northwesternmost of the New England states of the American Union, bounded N by Quebec (Canada), E by New Hampshire (from which it is separated by the Connecticut River), S by Massachusetts, and W by New York from which it is partly separated by Lake Champlain. There are in Lake Champlain a number of islands belonging to this state, including North Hero, Grand Isle, Isle La Motte, Hog Wood, Ratier, Potter, Providence, Straw Gull, Fishbladder, Savage, etc. The most important of these, with a peninsula which extends into the lake from Canada, constitute the county of Grand Isle. Vermont lies between the parallels of 43° 44' and 45° 3' N lat., its length from N to S being 166 miles, and has an area of 9545 sq m (land area, 9135 sq m).

Face of the Country—The greater part of the state is covered by the Green Mountains and their outliers, and in these mountains in character but there are large areas, especially in the E and in the W of beautiful pastoral and agricultural country. The main chain of the Green Mountains enters the state from Massachusetts in the SW section and traverses it completely to the Canada boundary giving off one or more large stems towards the centre of its course. The principal peaks are Mount Mansfield in about lat. 44° 33' N 4584 feet, Camel's Hump 4608 feet, Shrewsbury Peak, 3737 ft., Killington Peak 4241 ft., Ascomey 3329 ft., Equinox 3616 ft., Sterling 3700 ft., Solon, Anthony, etc. The mountains are generally more rounded in outline than is usual among the Appalachians, and they are largely clad with dense forests, but afford rich and abundant pasturage.

Rivers and Lakes—Apart from the Connecticut, there are no large or important streams associated with the state, but a number afford considerable water power and are largely utilised in manufacturing pursuits. The more notable among these are the Winooski (or Onion), on which is situated Montpelier the capital of the state, a tributary of Lake Champlain. Otter Creek and Poultney and Lamoille rivers, also tributaries of the same lake. The Missisquoi, Passumpsic, Wells, White, and West rivers, tributary to the Connecticut and the Black and Barton rivers, flowing into Lake Memphremagog. The Hoosac River a tributary of the Hudson crosses the SW corner of the state. Lake Champlain whose discharge is northward into the St. Lawrence River through the Richelieu River, extends along the western boundary for about 116 miles. It affords important steam navigation and is much visited for its beauty. The only other large lake of the state is Mont-Phragmorag, on the Canadian boundary-line.

Geology and Minerals.—Nearly the whole of Vermont belongs to the Azoic and Paleozoic periods, but there are limited Tertiary and Post-Tertiary deposits and an extensive capping of glacial drift. The mineral wealth of this state is important. It includes marbles of many grades (pure white, black, pale red, mottled, etc.) granite, slate, iron, copper, manganese, ochre, asbestos, and kaolin. Gold and silver have been obtained in small quantities at various points. Rutland affords a superior white marble, comparable to that of Carrara, and is the largest marble centre of the world its quarries giving employment to several thousand men. The marble quarry at Proctor is the largest single quarry in the world. The quantity of marble produced in 1903 was more than one-half of the product of the entire United States. Fairhaven, Middlebury, Castleton, Isle La Motte, Manchester and other localities have also furnished fine quantities of marble. Roxbury verd-antique Brandon a highly valued brown bonanite, besides manganese, kaolin ochre (used for paint) marble, lime, and a brown lignite which is employed to some extent as fuel. Grafton, Northfield, Pawlet, and Poolebury building-stone Grafton soapstone, Stratford, rich pyrites, affording copper and sulphuric acid. Barre and Brattleboro, granite. The mineral waters (chalybeate, sulphurous, or saline) of Clarendon, Albany, Shelton, Manchester, Putney etc have local and in some instances national reputations in the treatment of diseases. Vermont occupies after Pennsylvania the first place among the states of the Union in the value of its quarry products. The value of the granite quarried in 1902 was $1,810,179 of slate, $1,562,653 and of marble, $3,611,505.

Climate.—The climate of the state is on the whole severe, with a lingering winter but the extremes of temperature on the lowlands (about -20° and 100°) are not so pronounced as in the adjoining states. At Burlington the normal mean January temperature is about 18° – 20° the July temperature, 70° . The summer heat rarely much exceeds 90° . Lake Champlain is usually frozen over for several weeks about the middle of the winter. The average annual rainfall varies from about 40 inches in the N to 33 or 36 inches in the west-centre.

Agriculture.—In spite of its mountainous surface and its long and severe winters, Vermont ranks fairly well as an agricultural state. Much land which is unsuitable for good pasture for sheep and cattle. Forests cover about two-fifths of the area of the state. Spruce, hemlock, pine, cedar, and fir among coniferous timber trees, and beech, oak, rock maple, several species of birch, basswood, and other useful deciduous trees abound. The forests yield large quantities of lumber (fir-wood, tanagers' bark maple sugar and charcoal). Hay potatoes, oats, rye, wheat, Indian corn, grass and clover seed apples and all the ordinary staples of agriculture are abundantly produced. For maple sugar no state exceeds Vermont. There are some tracts, however with a cold and stony soil, particularly in the NE and in the more mountainous townships. As a rule, the western slopes of the mountains and the intervals lands on the Connecticut and on Lake Champlain have the best soils. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were: corn, 1,939,880 bushels; wheat, 81,992 bushels; oats, 3,719,077 bushels; barley, 666,611 bushels; rye, 47,924 bushels; buckwheat, 238,275 bushels; potatoes, 3,305,244 bushels, and hay 1,066,524 tons. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-crop of 1900 was 1,112,792 pounds.

Industries.—One of the leading industries of the state is the manufacture of lumber and timber products, which in 1900 were valued at $6,131,908. The planing mill products were valued at $2,598,581. Other industries are the making of wood-pulp and paper (at Bellows Falls principally) and the manufacture of monuments and tombstones, of cottons and woollens, machine-shop products, hosiery and knit goods, roofs and roofing materials, stone-ware fire-brick, musical instruments, agricultural implements, boots and shoes, etc. Of considerable importance is the manufacturing of dairy products,—cheese, butter and condensed milk.

Railroads.—In 1890 Vermont had 290 miles of railroad in 1855, 527 miles; in 1869, 554 miles; in 1885, 589 miles; in 1870, 614 miles; in 1875, 610 miles; in 1880, 712 miles; in 1885, 948 miles; in 1890, 966 miles; in 1900, 1039 miles.

Cities and Towns.—There are 14 counties, as follows: Addison, Bennington, Caledonia, Chittenden, Essex, Franklin, Grand Isle, Lamoille, Orleans, Orange, Rutland, Washington, Windham, and Windsor. The principal cities and towns are Burlington (pop. in 1900 12,646), Rutland (11,609), Barre (8445), Montpelier, the capital (8284), St. Albans (8232), St. Johnsbury (5648), and Bennington (5646).

Education.—The University of Vermont and the State agricultural college are at Burlington. Other colleges and institutions are Norwich University, at Northfield; Middlebury College, at Middlebury; and the Montpelier Seminary. There are state normal schools at Castleton, Randolph, and Johnson.

Government, etc.—The governor and the principal executive officers are elected for a term of two years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The counties are represented in the senate according to their population. Each town (township) is represented by 1 member in the house of representatives. The state sends 2 members to the lower house of Congress.

The population in 1793 was 65,426; in 1800 154,066; in 1810 217,895; in 1820 235,981; in 1830 280,653; in 1840 291,948; in 1850 314,130; in 1860, 316,096; in 1870 330,551; in 1880 332,296; in 1890 332,442; in 1900, 342,611. The foreign born population in 1900 numbered 44,474, of whom somewhat more than one-half were Canadians.

History.—Champlain discovered the lake which bears his name in 1609. In 1734 the government of Massachusetts built Fort Dummer near the present site of Brattleboro. Part of the country was held by Massachusetts to lie within her limits. Soon after the middle of the century numerous settlements sprang up under the auspices of the New Hampshire government, which claimed jurisdiction in the region. New York laid claim to the country as far E. as the Connecticut River by virtue of the charter granted to the Duke of York. George III. decided in favor of New York in 1764. Acts of hostility towards the New York authorities took place. In 1777 the people declared themselves independent and drew up a state constitution. In 1791 after much opposition on the part of New York, Vermont was admitted into the Union the first state added to the original thirteen.

Verona, vi-ro-nā a fortified city of Italy capital of the province of Verona situated at the base of some of the Tyrolean Alps, on both banks of the Adige, 82 miles W of Venice and 23 miles NNE of Mantua. Verona is next to Venice, the most important town of Venetia, and is distinguished by its striking medieval palace many of whose façades are adorned with sculptures and frescoes, now more or less effaced. The rapid Adige is enclosed by high embankments and spanned by six bridges. The city was strongly fortified by the Venetians early in the sixteenth century and after 1814 fresh works were constructed by the Austrians the fortifications forming with Pacher's Mantua, and Legnano, the famous Quadrilateral. On the right bank of the river are the picture gable Piazza delle Erbe, the ancient forum the Piazza dei Signori with the Prefettura, formerly the residence of the Scaligers, and the magnificent Palazzo del Consiglio, erected in the fifteenth century by Fra Giocando and containing the statues of famous modern and ancient Veronese. The Lungadige Panfilio a broad quay, extends along the right bank of the river SW of it as the Corso Cavour one of the most frequented streets with the handsome Palazzo Baviolo designed by Sanmichele. Other noted palaces are the Ragionerie, dating from 1193 now the seat of the jury court, with a grand flight of steps dating from the fourteenth century the Maffei (now Treves) with a remarkable spiral staircase, and the superb Palazzo Pompei (on the left bank of the river) by Sanmichele now containing the Museo Civico. The Castel Vecchio at the W end of the Corso is connected by a planed bridge dating from the fourteenth century with the left bank of the Adige S of the Corso is the Piazza Vittorlo Emanuele with the famous Roman amphitheatre erected under Diocletian which measured 564 feet in greatest diameter and had forty three tiers of steps, to the W are the old guard-house (Gran Guardia Vecchia) now used as the corn market, and the Portico an old gateway. The Via Nuova Lastrucata and the Via Nuova, NE of the Piazza Vittorlo Emanuele, form together the principal thoroughfares. To the S is the Arco de' Leon, an ancient Roman gateway. Other famous gates on the right bank of the river are the Porta del Palio and the Porta de Borsari a triumphal arch erected under the emperor Gallienus. On the left side of the Adige to the E is the Giardino Giusti a beautiful garden. To the N is the Castel San Pietro modern barracks erected on the site of an ancient Ostrogothic castle. Among the churches are Santa Maria Antica celebrated for the Gothic tombs of the Scaligers the cathedral (Duomo), a Gothic edifice, erected in the fourteenth century containing Titian's Assumption San Zeno Maggiore, one of the noblest Romanesque churches in northern Italy dating from 1130; and the ancient churches of Santa Maria in Organo, rebuilt by Sanmichele in the fifteenth century and San Giorgio in Braida, with fine works of Veronese and Brescian painters. Among the emporiums of Verona, the reputed home of Romeo and Juliet are the tomb of Juliet and a memorial tablet over the gateway of an old house, near the Piazza delle Erbe, marking the supposed residence of the Capuletti, Juliet's parents.

The institutions of Verona comprises academies of painting and sculpture, a municipal library (160 000 volumes) the Museo Civico, rich in works of Veronese art and containing valuable collections of natural history and antiquities the Museo Lapidario, with ancient marbles and classic inscriptions and the Biblioteca Capitolare, with precious palm-ments. The city existed under its present name in ancient times and figures in the period following the fall of the Roman Empire. It was prominent among the city-states of Italy in the latter part of the Middle Ages. From a republic it was transformed into a principality under the famous house of Scala, one of whose members, Can Grande de la Scala, is celebrated as a patron of Dante. Under this dynasty Verona held sway over a considerable district. In 1405 it passed under the dominion of Venice. From 1797 to 1805 and from 1814 to 1866 it belonged to Austria. In 1832 the Great Powers held a congress at Verona, which decreed the restoration of absolutism in Spain, whose king Ferdinand VII had driven his subjects to rebellion by his tyrannical acts. Versailles, ver sahl (Fr. pron van sahl) a town of France, capital of the department of Seine-et-Oise 18 miles SW of Paris. Versailles is laid out in rectangular streets and presents, on the whole, a monotonous appearance. It is intersected from N. to S. by the wide Avenue de Paris, which leads to the Place d'Armes, where the two other principal thoroughfares, the avenues St. Cloud and St. Ma-urice converge. Among the churches, the cathedral of St. Louis is the most noteworthy. The most striking monuments are those of General Roche and the Abbé de l'Épée. The pal-ace to which Versailles owes its fame was built by Louis XIV in 1672 and served as his residence and that of his successors until the Revolution. It consists of a central square and three wings. The marble court and the interior are famous for their splendor and the museum and gal-eries contain pictures and statues of great historical and artistic interest. In the Galerie des Glaces William I was proclaimed German Emperor. The park laid out in the formal style of the gardens of the Renaissance, is rich in terraces, basins, vases, marble statuary etc. The playing of the fountains, the largest of which is the Bassin de Nep-tune, is one of the great attractions of the park. Connected with it are the celebrated orangery and a school of horticul-ture. To the north are the Grand and Petit Trianon, two charming palaces, the latter the favorite residence of Marie Antoinette. Versailles has an artillery school and a library of 160 000 volumes. The town is the seat of a bishop.

England concluded a treaty of peace at Versailles with France and Spain on Sept. 3, 1763, on which day the treaty of Paris was signed in which she recognized the independence of the United States. Vesuvius, an ancient name of Panaeus.

Vesuvio (It. Vesuvio, vë-soo've-ö) a mountain of southern Italy and the only truly active volcano on the continent of Europe, rises up in striking grandeur from the plains of Campania, on the E. side of the Bay of Naples, about 16 miles E. by S. of the city of Naples. Its height varies usually from 3900 to 4300 feet (4300 ft. in Aug., 1906) depending upon material being added to or removed from the summit as the result of the volcano's activities. The mountain portion (as distinguished from the cone) swells up in a gentle undulation of 10-15 degrees gradient, and is largely scarred by great traversing lava-fields. Much of the famous lacrima Christi wine is cultivated on these lower slopes. The surmounting cone of loose volcanic ejecta (scoria, ash, etc.), with a height of 1400-1500 ft. now ascended by a cable railway rises abruptly at an angle of 30-35 degrees. Its summit aspect varies at frequent intervals, a fairly deep crater pit being sunk into it at times, while at other times it is solid-topped with a minor vent carried on an outer eminence. Vesuvius is flanked on the land side by Monte Somma, a semicircular mountain or ring, which some geologists have assumed to be the actual volcano whose disruption in the year A. D. 79 overwhelmed Pompeii and Herculaneum, and in whose centre the new Vesuvius was built up as the result of the eruption. A part of this mountain bears the name of Monte Ottaviano, and its highest point is the Punta del Nascone, 3730 ft. The deep notched valley which separates Monte Somma from Vesuvius, and into which the rocks of Somma plunge almost vertically is the Arco del Cavallo. The earliest recorded eruption of Vesuvius is that of the year 70 (Aug. 24, 25) described in two letters of Pliny the Younger addressed to Tacitus the historian and to which the destruction of Pompeii, Herculaneum and Stabiae is attributed. There was at the time no lava-flow. There were violent eruptions in the years 203, 472, 512, and 902. The first recorded discharge of liquid lava took place in 1036. Since then various eruptions, some of them extremely violent, have occurred. Among them may be specified those of 1631 (overwhelming Torre Annunziata, Torre del Greco, Resina, Portici, Bosco), 1707, 1707, 1779, 1794, 1804, 1806, 1822, 1834, 1838, 1847, 1850, 1856, 1858, 1861, 1867-68, 1872 (annually violent), 1876, 1895, 1903, 1906. Victorian, a river of Queensland Australia, is a tributary of the Cooper.

Victoria, a British colony forming one of the states of the Australian commonwealth, and occupying the SE. part of the continent. It is bounded on the N. by New South Wales (almost the whole boundary on this side being formed by the Murray R. or) on the SE and S by the Pacific Ocean, Bass Strait and the Indian Ocean and on the W. by South Australia. Area 87,884 sq. m., or only a part of the total area of Australia. The state is traversed for the greater part of its length by the Great Dividing Range, which in different parts bears the names of Tyndee (W. of Ballarat) and the Heales, Barry and Bowen mountains all virtually continuations of the Australian Alps of New South Wales. The loftiest summits are Bogong 5508 feet Featherston 5363 ft. Motham 5100 ft. and Cobblers, 5625 ft. In the extreme W. the Gram pians and the Victorian Range are disposed in such lines more or less transverse to the main chain. None of the summits rise to the line of perpetual snow and such indication of glacial action as exist pertain to a post-glacial period. In the western or what is known as the Portland district, in the basin of the Glenelg there are numerous cones and butresses 1000-2000 ft. in height, together with well preserved craters of extinct volcanoes. The chief rivers of Victoria are the Murray and its tributaries (Loddon, Campaspe, Boulton, Ovens and Mitta Mitta) the Snowy River (in the E.) La Trobe (in the SE.) Larn Larn (which discharges into the large indentation on the E. coast known as Port Phillip Bay) Glenelg (discharging into Discovery Bay on the SW.) and Wimmera (in the W. which flows itself in the sand). Of these streams only the Murray and the Goulburn are navigable for any distance. In the extensive western and northwestern region of grass, scrub (wool bush) and reed known as the Wimmera District a large number of salt and fresh-water lakes are scattered about, the best known being Hindmarsh and Albertus (through both of which the Wimmera flows) and Tyrell the last named receiving a part of the same name.

The climate of Victoria, despite extremes of summer heat (110 has been exceptionally noted) is the mildest or most temperate of any section of Australia, the average annual temperature being about 57° and the winter temperature (June, July, August) only at rare intervals descending much below the freezing point (Melbourne minimum 2°). The average annual rainfall ranges from about 15 inches in the NW to 25 and 30 inches in the E. (at Melbourne 20-25 inches). The plains of Victoria present a generally park like aspect where the vegetation is comparatively sparse and where there is a rapid gradation to the open pasture-country and to the heath and partially desert tracts. The mountain-slopes, ravines, and gorges, on the other hand display a forest of rare beauty and abundance, of almost impenetrable tree-ferns, acacias, and the gigantic eucalyptus (or blue-gum). Especially marked is the wealth of vegetable growth in the eastern maritime district known as Gippsland where the eucalyptus attains to proportions rivalled only by the sequoia of the western United States.

The chief resources of the colony are mining and wool-raising. The number of sheep in the colony in 1901 was 10,841 799, the product of wool of an annually fine grade in 1903 was $1,066,507 pounds, valued at $1 945 872. The Victorian gold-fields have furnished probably not less than two-thirds of the total gold product of Australia. The aggregate value of the gold mined between 1851 (when the discovery of the metal was made) and 1903 was upward of $286,000 000. The product in 1903 was 832,424 ounces, valued at $3,262,282. The number of miners employed in the gold-fields in 1903 was estimated at 25 852. Victoria furnishes some good coal as much as 200 000 tons having been mined in a single year (64,000 tons in 1903). Tin has been mined in small quantity. Considerable live-stock (horses) fruit, and agricultural produce are exported, but the manufactures supply as yet chiefly a home demand. There were in 1903 3401 miles of railway in operation. Capital, Melbourne. Pop. in 1901 1 201 076.

The governor of Victoria is appointed by the crown. The parliament consists of a legislative council and a legislative assembly. The colony of Victoria was organized in 1851. On Jan. 1 1901 it became a state of the commonwealth of Australia.

Victoria Land, or South Victoria, the name given to that portion of the supposed Antarctic continent, S of New Zealand, which bounds Ross Sea on the W. It extends southward from Cape Adare (somewhat E of lon 174° E.) to the farthest point that has been reached (63° 17' S) or seen by man, and with undefined limits westward. A lofty range of series of snow-covered mountains, giving origin to numerous glaciers, follows the coast in a general meridional direction, and rises in summits to 8000 and 9000 feet (Mount Melbourne) in elevation, with some points rising considerably higher (Mount Longstaff, in the extreme S., about 15,000 feet). In about lat. 77° 30' S. are the lofty detached entences, Erebus and Terror the former of which was in a state of moderate activity in 1904 when seen by Borchgrevink, and again in 1902 when observed by Scott. The volcano was in the same condition when discovered by Ross in 1841. Victoria Land rises rapidly westward into what would appear to be an ice-plateau similar to that of the interior of Greenland having a general elevation of 5000-6000 feet. On the coast-border much of the land is devoid of snow during the summer but the vegetation that responds to possibilities of growth is virtually all of lower types,—the mosses and lichens. A very few insects have been observed with these. See ANTARCTICA.

Vienne, vee-ā-nē (Ger. Wina, seen Fr. Vienne va-ā-nē, anc. Viandovne) the capital of Austria-Hungary, of the Cisleithan half of the monarchy and of the province of Lower Austria, situated on the right bank of the Danube 330 miles in a direct line SSE of Berlin. Lat of the new observatory 48° 13' 55" N lon 16° 20' 22" E. It stands in a plain bordered by spurs of the Styrian Alps, the Wien-erwald, terminating abruptly in the Kahlenberg (1404 feet above sea-level) and the Leopoldsberg. The elevation of the Danube here above the sea is 525 feet. The Donaukanal or Danube Canal a southern arm of the river traverses the city. It receives the small river Wien, recently vaulted over to a considerable extent and the Alser and Ottakringer creeks. The city has since 1890 been divided into 20 districts. Innere Stadt (the old city) Leopoldstadt, Landstrasse, Wieden, Margarethen, Mariahilf, Neubau, Josefstadt, Alsergrund, Favoriten, Simmering, Meidling, Hietzing, Rudolphsdorf, Fünfhaus, Ottakring, Hernals, Währing, Döbling, and Brigittenau. The modern aspect of Vienna dates from 1868 when the high walls which formerly surrounded the Innere Stadt and separated it from the suburbs (Vorstädte) were demolished. On the site of the walls and trenches has arisen the Ringstrasse, the most imposing modern street in all Europe, about 3 miles long, laid out in a succession of boulevards which encircle the Innere Stadt. In the SW part of the Innere Stadt, near the Ringstrasse, is the Hofburg (or Imperial palace) an immense and irregular pile of buildings the oldest part of which, the Schwarzenhof dates from the thirteenth century. A beautiful curved facade was completed in 1893. The recent reconstruction of the Hofburg includes the addition of two large wings at the south gate, the outer Burgher. The principal edifices on or near the Ringstrasse are the magnificent Gothic Rathaus or town hall with many statues and a tower 320 feet in height the two domed imperial museums (of natural history and of art) in the Italian Renaissance style, identical in appearance the Volkshaus, one of the finest of modern Gothic churches, erected in 1858-79; the university a large Tuscan Renaissance structure, with arcades in its quadrangular court the House of Parliament, the meeting-place of the Reichsrat of Cisleithania, in the Greek style; the Palace of Justice; the imperial opera-house a splendid Renaissance building, with sumptuous interior decorations; the Hofburgtheater in the later Renaissance style the Deutsche Volkstheater the Künstlerhaus, with permanent exhibitions of paintings the Handelsakademie (commercial academy) the Musikvereins-Gebäude (containing the conservatory of music) the Imperial Academy of Art, the scholastic, and the Bühnensaal (or expository building) erected by the emperor in commemoration of the heroism of the Ringtheater in 1881 whose site it occupies. The palaces of the archdukes Ludwig Victor Eugen, and Friedrich deserve mention. The last-named structure stands on the Augustiner Bastion one of the few remnants of the old bastions. Fronting on the Ringstrasse are the Stadtpark an attractive pleasure resort, about 32 acres in extent, with a pretty Kärntner and the striking statues of Schubert and the painter Schindler the Volksgarten, near the Hofburg with the handsome Grillparzer monument the Imperial Hofgarten and the Rattenpark enclosing the Rathausplatz, a most imposing square. On the Schwarzenbergplatz rises the equestrian statue of Field Marshal Schwarzenberg. Besides these monuments, there are in this vicinity statues of Beethoven (by Zumbusch) of Schiller (by Schilling) and of Goethe (by Hellmer) and the charming Mozart monument by Tugner. The imposing monument to Maria Theresia, by Zumbusch occupies the space between the two imperial museums. On the outer Burgplatz are the equestrian statues of Archduke Charles and Prince Eugene of Savoy both by Fernbrun. The centre of the Innere Stadt is the crowded Stephansplatz with the cathedral one of the most magnificent specimens of Gothic architecture dating mainly from the fourteenth century. This great tower completed in the fifteenth century is about 410 feet high. The cathedral has been largely restored since 1852. The principal thoroughfares extending from the Stephansplatz are the Kärntnerstrasse and the Graben with handsome shops. The Kohlmarkt an other crowded street leads from the Graben to the Hofburg. Near by is the Herengasse, with stately palaces of the aristocracy. Notable squares in the Innere Stadt are the Hohe Markt, with a votive monument by Fischer von Erlach the Neue Markt, with a handsome fountain by Raphael Donner the square Am Hof the largest in this district and the Freising with a fine fountain by Schwanthaler. Among the churches in the Innere Stadt, besides those already mentioned are Maria-Siegen dating in part from the fourteenth century the Augustiner Kirche with the famous monument to the Archduchess Christine by Canova the Capuchin church with the tombs of the members of the Hapsburg family and the Peterskirche, built in imitation of St. Peter's at Rome. Not far from the Ringstrasse is the domed Karlskirche, in the Italian baroque style, with two colossal columns in front of the portico.

A number of bridges lead across the Wien and the Donaukanal from the Innere Stadt to the other districts. The Franz-Josefs-Quai with handsome modern edifices as leads along the Donaukanal and leads to the Ringstrasse. The principal thoroughfare in the second district (Leopoldstadt) which lies NE. of the Innere Stadt, beyond the Donaukanal is the Praterstrasse (formerly Jägerstrasse) which terminates in the Praterstrasse. From there stretches eastward the Prater a natural park 43.6 acres in extent, with unevenly frequented by the fashionable world and others devoted to amusements for the people the whole presenting on summer evenings a scene of extraordinary animation. The first station of the Northern railway (Nordbahn) is situated in the Leopoldstadt. NW of this district is the Augarten a park of 125 acres, in the French style. In the NE. a new quarter the Donauviertel has arisen, as a result of the Danube improvement works which have provided a broad, new channel for the river and thus eliminated the annual danger of inundation to which this part of the city had formerly been exposed. The third district (Landstrasse) contains the Belvedere, a château erected originally for Prince Eugene of Savoy, and now occupied by the heir presumptive Archduke Franz Ferdinand. Adjoining the terraced garden of the Belvedere laid out in the French style, is the Schwarzenberg garden with the Schwarzenberg palace.

Vienna is rich in institutions of learning. The university founded in 1385, occupies a foremost position in medicine. The number of students in 1904 was 2293. Connected with the university are astronomical and meteorological observatories, various museums and laboratories, and a botanical garden. The polytechnic institute has extensive chemical and physical collections. Among other institutions of high rank are the agricultural college, the academy of sciences, the geological institute, the conservatory of music, the military geographical institute, and the government printing-office. The imperial library, founded in 1440, has about 100,000 volumes, 24,000 manuscripts, and 350,000 engravings; that of the university, 650,000 volumes. The collection of manuscripts in the Oriental Academy is probably the richest of its kind in the world. The imperial picture-gallery in the art museum contains paintings by nearly all the great masters. Of great value also are the collections of the academy of art of Prince Liechtenstein and counts Hearnach Sulzbach, and Czernin. The famous Albertina collection of the archduke Friedrich comprises more than 200,000 engravings. The imperial chamber of treasures contains gems of priceless value. The imperial collections of coins and antiquities, as well as the cabinets of zoology and mineralogy are of almost unrivalled completeness. Among other noteworthy collections are those of the municipal historical museum the museum of Andrian ethnography and the museum of art and industry. The treasury of the arsenal has a remarkable collection of instruments and trophies of war. Among the charitable institutions the general hospital one of the largest in the world the insane asylum the foundling and maternity hospitals and the institutions for the blind and the deaf mute are the most prominent.

The surroundings of Vienna are noted for their charming scenery. The gardens of Schönbrunn the imperial summer palace, are a favorite resort of the Viennese. The climate of Vienna is temperate, but very variable. Mean annual temperature 48° mean temperature of July, 64° of January 28°. The city is the great commercial centre of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. The principal manufactures comprise silk and woollen, clothing machinery, locomotives, railway cars, mathematical surgical and musical instruments, piano furniture, household utensils, articles of bronze pottery jewelry leather goods, gloves, etc. The breweries of the city are famous. The population in 1890 (including the new districts) was 1,341,597. In 1900 1,648,356. Within the last half-century the population (including annexations) has increased five-fold.

Viadobona was a station of the Roman legions in Upper Pannonia. Vienna rose into importance as the capital of the duchy of Austria. In 1365 it became the seat of a university the second in the territories of the Holy Roman (German) Empire. Its predecessor having been that of Prague. From the middle of the sixteenth century Vienna was the virtual capital of the Hapsburg Empire down to its extinction in 1806. The city successfully withstood attack by the Turks in 1529 and 1683. On the second occasion it was relieved by the forces of the Polish king John Sobieski and a German army which overpowered the Turks in a great battle before its walls. In 1814-15 the Congress of Vienna was held to reorganize the political system of Europe on the downfall of Napoleon.

Vienna (anc. Vienne) a town of France, capital of an arrondissement, in the department of Isère, 54 miles W. N. of Grenoble, on the left bank of the Rhone at the influx of the Isère. It is irregularly built and unattractive in some of its parts its chief interest being due to its Roman remains. Among these the most striking is the temple of Augustus and Livia a building similar in structure to the famous Maison Carrée at Nîmes. Some colossal Roman arches are considered the remains of a forum or of a theatre. The Plan d'Aiguille (popularly known as Pilate's Tomb) is an ancient pyramid probably a relic of a circus. The handsome Gothic cathedral of St. Maurice dates from the twelfth century. Its interior like that of the church of St. André-le-Rou gives evidence of decay. The Romanesque church of St. Pierre begun in the ninth century and thoroughly restored, contains now the Musée Lapidaire with some interesting antiquities. The town hall is a fine modern building. On the right bank of the Isère stands a colossal statue of the Virgin erected in 1900. The town has manufactures of textile metallic articles paper etc. Pop. in 1901 20,064 (commune, 24,418). Vienna was an important town under the Romans and in the Middle Ages. It figures as the capital of the kingdom of the Burgundians and of the kingdom of Cyprien Burgundy. It was formerly the seat of an archbishop. At the council of Vienna, held in 1311-12 the consecration of the order of Knights Templars was decreed.

Virginia, a small town of Ireland, co. and 16 miles SE of Cavan.

Virginia, a South Atlantic state of the American Union one of the original thirteen states, is bounded NE. and E. by Maryland, the District of Columbia, and the Atlantic Ocean, S. by North Carolina and Tennessee, and W. and NW. by Kentucky and West Virginia. From Maryland it is separated, for the most part, by the Potomac River, from Kentucky by the Cumberland Mountains, and from West Virginia by a devious line which follows, in part, the crests of the Alleghany Mountains and other ridges of the Appalachian system. The state lies between lat 36° 21' and 39° 21' N. Area of the land-surface, 40,125 sq. mi., of the appertaining waters, 2536 sq. mi.

Face of the Country—The state presents a great variety of surface, as exemplified in the mountain region of the W. the hilly Piedmont Country on its eastern flank, declining eastward to the Middle District and southward in the South-Side the beautiful Valley of Virginia, a portion of the Great Valley of the eastern United States lying immediately W. of the Blue Ridge Mountains the picturesque Little Tennessee country in the SW. the Tide-water district, E. and SE. of the Piedmont region and including the historic Northern Neck and the other Peninsulas and lastly the detached Eastern Shore, which lies on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay. These all bear local peculiarities of aspect,—the western portion having much sublimity and in spring scenery the eastern slope great beauty and diversity of surface and the tide-water counties a generally level surface, with a naturally fertile soil and a somewhat less healthful climate, owing to the existence of considerable swamp land. The greater portion of the Diamond Swamp is in the SE. part of the state. The Piedmont or "foot-hill" region has a general elevation of 500-1000 feet and abuts abruptly upon the Blue Ridge, which is the dominant mountain-mass of the state, and represents structurally (in part, at least) the similarly named mountains of Pennsylvania and Maryland and the Highlands of New York. South of the James River it flattens out in part into a broad plateau, corresponding to that of North Carolina, and here are located the highest summits of the state, among them Rogers Mountain 5719 ft., White Top, 6530 ft., and Peaks of Otter 4001 ft. The Blue Ridge extends completely across the state, and bounds on the E. the extremely fertile Shenandoah Valley (or Valley of Virginia) occupying an elevation of 700-1350 ft.—the "Piedmont of America," beyond which follow the ranges of the Alleghany and Shenandoah (or Kittatinny) Mountains, whose trend is NE. and SW. and which form direct continuations of the mountains of Maryland and Pennsylvania. Except in the extreme S. they rarely attain elevations much exceeding 3000 ft. but some of the summits rise to 4000 ft.

Baye Rivers etc.—Chesapeake Bay, Hampton Roads, and the noble estuaries of the Potomac, Rappahannock, York and James afford excellent shipping facilities in eastern Virginia. The principal affluent of the Potomac is the Shenandoah of the Rappahannock the Rapidan the York receives the Pamunkey and the Metapony the James is joined by the Appomattox and the Chickahominy. The Notoway, Blackwater and Meherrin flow into the Chewan in North Carolina, the Dan and the Staunton form the Roanoke and in the SW. there are important affluents of the Tennessee (Holston) and Great Kanawha rivers. Several of the eastern tributary rivers receive the tides and afford some navigation but less extensively than in colonial times, for the effect of agriculture has been to fill up many minor channels. The navigation of the James River has been supplemented by the construction of a canal along its upper course. In the SE. various canals afford commercial intercourse with the sounds of North Carolina.

Geology and Mineral Wealth—A line running southward from Alexandria to Fredericksburg, Richmond and Petersburg and the North Carolina boundary-line marks very nearly the limit of tide-water and the boundary between the Azoic rocks of the Piedmont and the Tertiary and alluvial of the tide-water counties. The Archæan region is limited northward by the Blue Ridge, upon which rest several short V. and S. belts of the Triassic, and at several points the Triassic strata are coal-bearing. These Triassic coals are generally bituminous and of good quality, but some are native coals of the highest excellence. The mountain and valley regions beyond the Blue Ridge display complicated successions of Paleozoic limestones, sandstones, and shales. In the southwestern counties there are beds of coal of true Carboniferous age, including anthracite, semibituminous, and bituminous coals. Virginia has gold, copper, lead, iron (in abundance), graphite, zinc, sulphur, mica, fire-clay, kaolin, gypsum in vast beds, fine granite, slate, marble, limestone, sandstone, flagstone, pyrites, earth, marl, steatite, water-lime, and other useful but thus far not extensively utilized minerals. Rock salt is an important product of southwestern Virginia. The output of coal in 1933 was 3,451,307 short tons, valued at $3,352,149 (with the largest quantity mined being in Wise co. near the extreme SW). The quantity of iron (brown hematite) mined is fairly large, but there has been a decrease in the production of late. In 1900 it amounted to nearly 600,000 short tons. The state abounds in medicinal springs of high and wide repute, chiefly in the mountain and Piedmont districts, and many of the localities where they occur are fashionable or much-frequented resorts.

Climate.—The climate of the state generally is temperate, with only moderate extremes of temperature in the low lands and the lower mountain valleys. The average January temperature varies from 32° to 37°; the mean of July is 72°-75°. The mountain counties have a short but somewhat severe winter with long and delightfully cool summers. The tide-water country has many swampy tracts, which render it unhealthy during summer and autumn, except on salt-water channels and high grounds. But this region has a very mild winter climate. The annual rainfall varies from about 35 to 45 inches.

Forests.—Virginia has afforded much white oak, yellow pine, cedar, juniper and cypress timber besides hickory, ash, walnut, tulip, locust, chestnut, hickory, etc. Dismal Swamp has afforded a great deal of timber and the lumber interest of the state is still one of much importance, although the forests are being largely thinned or removed. In 1900 the forest area covered upward of 50 per cent. of the full land area of the state. Tannery bark, sumach leaves, fire-wood, charcoal, etc. are important forest products. The forests in many parts still abound in deer and other game.

Agricultural Resources.—The limestone lands of the charming Valley of Virginia and of Little Tennessee are of almost unsurpassed fertility and the same is true of the marly soils of some of the river alluvions. These are admirably adapted to the growth of the cereals. Wheat and corn and orchard fruits generally do well in most parts of Virginia. Much of the tide-water region is given over to the cultivation of early vegetables the greater portion of which is destined for the northern markets. Some cotton is also grown in this section. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were: corn, 28,183,709 bushels; wheat, 9,421,932 bushels; oats, 5,167,868 bushels; rye, 370,123 bushels; buckwheat, 58,812 bushels; potatoes, 3,223,778 bushels; and hay, 589,133 tons. For stock raising wool growing and dairy farming the state offers great facilities. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-ship of 1900 was 1,790,360 pounds. No state in the Union, except Kentucky equals Virginia in the amount and value of her ancient staple, tobacco.

Manufactures.—The manufacturing interests of the state have been of slow development, but the tobacco-works of Lynchburg, Richmond and Danville the flour-mills of Alexandria and Richmond, and the iron-establishments of Richmond and Norfolk have been in successful operation for many years. Extensive ship-yards and docks are located at Newport News. The value of the chief manufactured products in 1900 were: tobacco, $21,278,266; flour and grist-mill products, $12,687,267; lumber and timber products, $14,824,075; cars (including repairing), $9,277,379; iron and steel $3,341,883; leather $4,716,920; textiles, $3,382,583.

Fisheries.—The tidal waters of the state afford profitable fisheries of thud, bass, and other food-fishes, and the oyster catch is of great pecuniary importance. The state has encouraged and protected these industries by appropriate legislation. Many oysters are shipped hence for planting in northern waters.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—Under this head may be enumerated Luray Cave, in Page co.; Weyer's and New markets caves, the Natural Bridge, in Rockbridge co.; Balsam Mountains, and the Natural Tunnel, in Scott co. The mountains of Virginia have a delightful summer climate and inspiring scenery. Old Point Comfort, on Chesapeake Bay and Hampton Roads and Virginia Beach are well-known sea-side resorts.

Education.—The University of Virginia, near Charlottesville, is a state institution founded by Jefferson, which takes a high rank among American universities. Other important institutions are Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, the Virginia Military Institute, at the same place, William and Mary College (the second oldest college in the United States), at Williamsburg, Emory and Henry College, at Emory, Hampden Sydney College, at Hampden Sydney, Richmond College and the Virginia Union University, at Richmond, Randolph-Mason College at Ashland, Roanoke College, at Salem, the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, at Blacksburg, the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute (for colored and Indians), the Virginia Normal and Collegiate Institute at Petersburg, the Female State Normal School at Farmville, and the female colleges at Abingdon, Danville, Farmville, Lynchburg, and Petersburg. There are professional schools of high character in the state.

Railroads.—In 1880 there were 384 miles of railroad in 1880 1379 miles, in 1879 1483 miles, in 1880 1836 miles, in 1880 3368 miles, in 1900 3793 miles.

Counties and Cities.—The counties in 1906 were 100, viz., Accomac, Albemarle, Alexandria, Albemarle, Amelia, Amherst, Appomattox, Augusta, Bath, Bedford, Bland, Botetourt, Brunswick, Buchanan, Buckingham, Campbell, Caroline, Carroll, Charles City, Charlotte, Chesterfield, Clarke, Craig, Culpeper, Cumberland, Dickenson, Dinwiddie, Elizabeth City, Essex, Fairfax, Fauquier, Floyd, Fincastle, Franklin, Frederick, Giles, Gloucester, Goochland, Grayson, Greene, Greensville, Halifax, Hanover, Henrico, Henry, Highland, Isle of Wight, James City, King and Queen, King George, King William, Lancaster, Lee, Loudoun, Louisa, Lunenburg, Madison, Mathews, Mecklenburg, Middlesex, Montgomery, Nanamoud, Nelson, New Kent, Norfolk, Northampton, Northumberland, Nottingham, Orange, Page, Patrick, Pittsylvania, Powhatan, Prince Edward, Prince George, Princess Anne, Prince William, Pulaski, Rappahannock, Richmond, Roanoke, Rockbridge, Rockingham, Russell, Scott, Shenandoah, Smyth, Southampton, Spotsylvania, Stafford, Surry, Sussex, Tazewell, Warren, Warwick, Washington, Westmoreland, Wise, Wythe, and York. There are a number of independent cities—viz., Alexandria, Bristol, Buena Vista, Charlottesville, Danville, Fredericksburg, Lynchburg, Manchester, Newport News, Norfolk, Petersburg, Portsmouth, Radford, Richmond, Roanoke, Staunton, Williamsburg, and Winchester. The principal cities are Richmond, the capital (pop. in 1906 85,656), Norfolk the principal seaport (48,624), Petersburg (23,616), Roanoke (21,495), Newport News (19,536), Lynchburg (18,891), Portsmouth (17,427), Danville (16,680), Alexandria (14,583) and Manchester (9715).

Government, etc.—The governor and principal executive officers are chosen for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of delegates, the members of the former being elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 19 members to the lower house of Congress.

The population in 1790 was 747,619. In 1800 880,200. In 1810 974,600. In 1820 1,065,365. In 1830 1,211,406. In 1840 1,239,797. In 1850 1,421,601. In 1860 1,596,318. In 1870 (after the secession of West Virginia) 1,225,163. In 1880 1,512,565. In 1890 1,656,930. In 1900 1,854,184. The negro population in 1900 was 680,722. The foreign-born in that year numbered only 19,061.

History.—The colony of Virginia the first British colony planted in America, was founded in 1607 by a party sent out by the London Company. A little more than 20 years before this Sir Walter Raleigh had attempted to found a colony on the coast of what is now North Carolina and the name of Virginia had been bestowed on this part of the American continent by Queen Elizabeth. The first settlement was at Jamestown and the foremost man among the colonists was Captain John Smith. The early settlers were supporters of the Anglican church and of the royal supremacy and among them were many persons of gentle birth. In 1619 a colonial assembly met at Jamestown the first representative body convened in the New World. The same year witnessed the beginnings of negro slavery in the colony. In 1624 the colony was placed under the crown of Virginia played by the side of Massachusetts the leading part in the revolutionary struggle. In 1776 a state constitution was adopted. Down to the year 1816 Virginia was the most populous state of the Union. In April, 1861 Virginia joined the Confederate States, whose capital was established at Richmond. The state was the chief theatre of the operations of the Civil War. At the beginning of the conflict the western part of the state seceded from Virginia and in 1863 it was admitted into the Union as West Virginia. Reconstruction was completed in Virginia in 1870. Seven presidents of the United States (Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Wm. H. Harrison, Tyler and Taylor) were natives of this state.

Vitebsk, a town of Russia, capital of the government of Vitebsk, situated on both sides of the Dvina. It was formerly a frontier town of Lithuania, Russian dominion dating from the first partition of Poland in 1772. The town presents but little of architectural interest outside of one or two of its churches. It is in part modernized and has an electric tramway. Tanning is an important industry and there is considerable trade. Pop. in 1897 66,143 more than one-half of whom were Jews.

Viterbo, ve-tër-bo, a town of Italy in the province of Rome, situated at the foot of Monte Cimino 43 miles NNW of Rome. It is surrounded by old Lombard walls and towers, and presents many interesting architectural features. On the Piazza del Plebiscito in the heart of the town stands the Palazzo Municipale, dating from the thirteenth century with a handsome portico. It contains the municipal museum with Etruscan Roman and medieval antiquities. The venerable Romanesque cathedral of San Lorenzo and the Gothic church of San Francesco are among the most striking religious edifices. The Cappella Massetoria is decorated with fine frescoes by Lorenzo da Viterbo. The episcopal palace is an interesting thirteenth-century edifice, now in a state of decay. The Piazza Fontana Grande contains a large fountain of great antiquity. The attractive public gardens are embellished with numerous busts. In the vicinity of the town to the N are artesian Etruscan and Roman remains 2 miles W of it is a sulphur spring (Bulicame) with a popular bathing establishment. Viterbo became a possession of the papal see as part of the Patrimony of St. Peter the legacy of Countess Matilda of Tuscany who died in 1115. It figured prominently under the popes. Pop. (commune) in 1901 31,292.

Pop. in 1891 1 519 000 in 1901 1 720 000.

Wales is divided into 13 counties, as follows

Counties.	Pop. in 1901	Counties.	Pop. in 1901
Anglesey	30 000	Flintshire	61 700
Broeknockshire	50 000	Glamorganshire*	250 000
Cardiganshire	50 000	Merionethshire	42 110
Carmarthenshire	120 000	Montgomeryshire	54 000
Carnarvonshire	120 000	Pembrokeshire	23 132
Denbighshire	120 000	Radnorshire	22 000

* Within the limits of the ancient county of Glamorgan are the county boroughs (civil counties) of Cardiff and Swansea.

The counties of Anglesey, Carnarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth and Montgomery constitute what is known as North Wales, while South Wales consists of the counties of Brecknock, Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor. The largest cities are Cardiff, Swansea, and Merthyr Tydfil. The NW corner of the country is cut off from the main-land by a very narrow channel, Menai Strait, and constitutes the island of Anglesey. Barring this island, which has a generally flat or undulating surface, practically the whole of Wales is mountainous, with the ridges trending in the main in N-S and NE-SW directions. The bulk of these form what is now commonly designated the Cambrian Mountains. The region is constructed throughout of ancient rocks (Cambrian, Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous) traversed in numerous parts by volcanic intrusions, and has its rock masses, through extreme metamorphic action converted in greater part into slates and shales. The highest summit of the country is Snowdon in Carnarvonshire, 3560 feet, which overtops the highest mountain of England. The volcanic Cader Idris, in Merionethshire, one of the most beautiful mountains of Great Britain rises to 3025 ft. The loftiest points of South Wales are the Brecknock (or Brecon) Beacons, about 5 miles S. of the town of Brecon, where the Pen-y-Fan attains 2910 ft. The chief rivers are the Severn, Wye, Usk, Tewy, Teifi, Dwy, Conway, Clwyd, and Dee, the vales of some of which are very fertile. The lakes are insignificant. Numerous bays and inlets, some of them furnishing excellent harbors, indent the coast-line, as Carnarvon and Cardigan bays, on the W. St. Bride's Bay and Milford Haven on the SW. Carmarthen and Swansea bays separated by the peninsula of Gower on the S. and the estuary of the Dee and the harbor of Beaumaris, on the N. With its almost continuously rugged surface and its upper moorlands of moss and fern glowing in a wealth of heather blossoms Wales presents a region of rare attraction to the tourist. Its generally mild climate—which in some parts permits of the out-door growth of sub-tropical plants—further attracts the traveler. The average annual rainfall is upward of 80 inches.

The natural resources of Wales lie in its great mineral wealth, comprising iron, copper, lead, zinc, and coal together with vast deposits of excellent slate. The total mineral output in 1903 was valued at £12,017 496. The coal mined in that year by far the greater part coming from the southern coal-fields (in Carmarthenshire and Glamorganshire, and extending W. into Pembrokeshire and E. into Monmouthshire, England) of which Cardiff is the great shipping port, was 35,000,000 tons. The more northerly coal fields are those of the valleys of the Severn (Oswestry, Forest of Wyre, Forest of Dean) and of the region of the Dee estuary. The coal deposits of the S. lie in a vast synclinal of the Devonian formation. Glamorganshire is the chief seat of the mining and metallurgical industries. Here the iron-industry has assumed great proportions, and there are vast establishments at Swansea for the reduction of copper and other ores brought from foreign countries, as well as for the manufacture of tin-plate. Cardiff ships more coal than any other port in the world. The agricultural resources of Wales are slender. In many parts cattle-rearing is more important than the cultivation of the soil. The principal ports are Cardiff, Swansea, and Holyhead.

Wales is divided into the four Anglican bishoprics of Llandaff, St. David's, Bangor and St. Asaph. The majority of the people are descendants from the Church of England. At the head of the educational institutions are the three University Colleges at Aberystwith, Bangor and Cardiff. Lampeter is the seat of St. David's College. The bulk of the inhabitants of Wales are Welsh, a people belonging to the Cymric (Kymric) or Brythonic branch of the Celts. They call themselves Kymry. Nearly one-half of those who speak Welsh speak English also.

Wales was inhabited in ancient times by the Britons, Ordovices, and other Celtic tribes. The country was included in the Roman territorial division of Britannia Superior or Secunda. The Anglo-Saxon conquest of England drove great numbers of Britons into the fastnesses of Wales. These new-comers were merged in the body of their Celtic kin. In Anglo-Saxon and Norman times the country was divided into various prinipalities. These had to acknowledge the overlordship of the kings of England, but the Welsh continued to lead a practically independent existence until Edward I. undertook the conquest of the country which he accomplished in 1277-83. Edward created his son (Edward II.) Prince of Wales, a title still conferred upon the heir to the British throne. At the close of the fourteenth century the Welsh rose in rebellion under Owain Glendower but after a struggle of several years the authority of England was re-established. In 1536 Wales was incorporated with England.

Warsaw (Pol. Warszawa var. shi-rá Ger. Harschen var. shi-r Fr. lars var. shi-r) a city of Russian Poland capital of a government of its own name and of the general government of Warsaw (suburban, Russian Poland) and formerly capital of the kingdom of Poland on the left bank of the Vistula 625 miles S.W. of St. Petersburg and 320 miles E of P. in Lat. of observatory 52° 13' 0" N. 10° 1' 5" E. The city is built for the most part on a hill about 100 feet above the river sloping towards the W to an undulating plain. The suburb of Praga, on the right bank of the Vistula, is connected with the city by a fine iron bridge. Warsaw is dominated by the Alexander outcrop in the N. and by 15 detached forts. The old town with its narrow and tortuous streets bears in part a medieval aspect. Beyond the gate 11 in number is the suburb, now included within the municipal jurisdiction.

Warsaw which is still the active centre of Polish life, presents an animated appearance. On its most frequented square, the Castle Square, originally named after Sigismund III stands the onset of the old Polish king now the residence of the governor general. It was erected by the Masovian dukes restored in the seventeenth century and greatly embellished by John Sobieski and Stanislas Poniatski. The Saxon Square is another fine public place. The best known and busiest thoroughfare is the Cracow Suburb with many palaces and elegant shops. The Ujazdowski Avenue, containing numerous villas, is the fashionable promenade and leads to the open-air resorts of the populace. Jerusalem Street is another fine avenue. The city possesses a picturesque attraction in its beautiful gardens, such as that adjoining the Saxon Square (Saxon Garden) or those surrounding palaces like the Krasiński the Belvedere estate, and the Łazienki, an elegant estate in the Italian style, built in 1767-88. Other palaces are the Zamoycki with valuable art collections the former Erskine palace, which now serves as the telegraph office and the Radziwill, used for administrative purposes. Other edifices worthy of note are the grand national theatre, the town-hall and the buildings of the imperial bank and the finance administration.

The Roman Catholic cathedral of St. John a Gothic structure, founded in the middle of the thirteenth century, contains many monuments to distinguished Poles, among them one by Thorwaldsen. The church of the Holy Virgin dating from 1418 is the best preserved of the ancient ecclesiastical edifices, among which may also be mentioned the church of St. Anna, founded in 1464. The domed Lutheran church was finished in 1799 the Alexander church, erected by Alexander I. has recently been restored. The large Russian Alexander Nevski cathedral has been in course of erection since 1864. The public monuments include an obelisk commemorating the Polish generals who fell in 1831 faithful to the Russian crown, and statues of Paskewitch Opatowicz, John Sobieski Sigismund III. and the poet Mickiewicz. The university founded in 1818 and suspended after the revolution of 1830-31 was reopened in 1859 as a Russian institution. It had 1400 students in 1902. Connected with it are a library ethnographic museum, observatory and botanical gardens. The city possesses a polytechnic institute, a conservatory of music, and a museum of fine arts.

Warsaw is, next to Lodz the principal industrial centre of Poland. Its manufactures include metals wares, machinery food products chemicals, matches, spirits, and tobacco. The shoe industry carried on in small establishments is in the aggregate considerable. The climate of Warsaw is temperate. Mean annual temperature, 46° mean temperatures of January 24° of July 66°. The city is the seat of an orthodox Russian and of a Roman Catholic archbishop. Pop. in 1882, 382,964, in 1897 638,208 of whom about one-third were Jews. Pop. in 1905 estimated at about 750,000.

Warsaw rose into importance in the Middle Ages as the residence of the dukes of Masovia. Early in the seventeenth century it supplanted Cracow as the capital of Poland, Cracow remaining however the coronation-city. In July 1656 the Poles were vanquished here in a three-day battle by the forces of Charles X. of Sweden and Frederick William the Great Elector of Brandenburg. In 1662 Charles XII of Sweden entered the city. In Nov. 1794 the Russians stormed Praga, where they committed frightful atrocities and forced Warsaw in capitulation. From 1795 to 1806 the city was in the possession of Prussia. From 1807 to 1813 it was the capital of the duchy of Warsaw which was ruled by Frederick Augustus I. king of Saxony as a vassal of Napoleon. It was occupied in 1813 by the Russians, under whom it became the capital of the new kingdom of Poland. In Nov. 1830 it rose against the Russians. In Sept. 1831 the forces of the war re-entered the city.

Its N. boundary line is the parallel of 49° N. lat. as far W. as the Gulf of Georgia, whence it follows the Canal de Haro and the Strait of Juan de Fuca to the open sea. On the E. the boundary is the meridian of 117° W. lon. as far S. as the Snake River which stream is thence the boundary to the SE. angle of the state. Thence westward the boundary follows the parallel of 46° N. lat. to the Columbia River which is the southern boundary from that point to the sea. Area of the land-surface, 66,890 sq. m. of the appertaining waters, 2300 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The Cascade Range, largely a dissected volcanic plateau of several thousand feet elevation traverses the state from E. to N. and divides it into two very distinct sections. Western Washington comprising two-fifths of the whole is mainly a densely-forested country receiving a heavy rainfall. It has a few very fertile prairies and some very rough and broken mountain-lands. Eastern Washington is but lightly timbered as a rule, has a comparatively dry climate, and is in great part a vast basaltic plateau (Columbia Plateau or Palus) of 1000-2000 feet elevation built up of superimposed lava-plateaus and deeply timbered by traversing waters. Is or is close association with the Cascade Range are the volcanic peaks of Mount Rainier or Tacoma (14,330 feet high) Mount Baker (10,837 ft.) Mount St. Helens (9750 ft.) and Mount Adams (12,470 ft.) Some of these volcanoes, with perfect outlines and terminal craters, show signs of recent activity and are permanently snow-clad. Mount Rainier carries glaciers of the second magnitude (Cowlitz Nisqually Emmons, etc.) The Coast Range of the region to the south is represented in Washington by the Olympic Mountains (Mount Olympus 9150 ft., Fitz Henry Peak 8688 ft.) Mount Constance, 7777 ft., between which and the Cascade Range is the deep lowland occupied in part by the ramified estuaries of Puget Sound. A subordinate mountain-mass known as the Blue Mountains occupies the SE. part of the state.

Coast-Line, Rivers.—On the Pacific coast and the Strait of Juan de Fuca there are numerous excellent harbors; while the deep and tranquil waters of the noble Puget Sound of Hood's Canal, of Admiralty Inlet, and of the lower Columbia River present unrivalled harbor facilities, and give to the state a commanding position in the commercial development of the Pacific coast. The Columbia River affords ship navigation nearly to the Cascades; and throughout the state this stream and its main affluents, the Snake and the Clark afford steamboat navigation with occasional interruption from rapids. The other principal rivers of eastern Washington are the Spokane, Okanogan, Yakima, and Palouse, direct or indirect affluents of the Columbia. Western Washington has many small rivers, among which are the Cowlitz, Chhalia (emptying into Grey's Harbor in the Pacific Ocean) Nisqually and Snohomish. The larger Skagit River in the NW part of the state, discharges into Puget Sound. Lake Chelan in the N. part of the state, has a length of about 40 miles.

Geology.—Nearly all that part of eastern Washington which lies S. of the upper Columbia and Spokane rivers is of a volcanic formation of comparatively recent geological age but portions of the north and the Olympic Mountains are of ancient date, extending to the Aztec period. The immediate coast-region with the Puget Sound country and the valley of the Cowlitz, is of Miocene Tertiary age and contains much lignite, while the San Juan Islands have in part been referred to the Cretaceous. The volcanic region of the E. forms part of the famous Columbia plateau to which reference has already been made. The Blue Mountains are a part of the same formation. From this state considerable gold and some silver have been obtained; but the product at present is not very large. The principal mineral product is coal which affords abundant fuel of good and cooking quality. Most of the coal is mined in King, Pierce and Kittitas co. The product in 1903 was 3,193,275 short tons valued at $5,380,870. The output of gold in 1903 was valued at $507,885.

Climate.—The climate of the state is very different in the eastern and western sections, that of the Pacific side of the Cascade Range being generally equable, with mild winters and temperate summers, while in the region E. of the mountains it is marked by extremes of temperature, ranging from about -20° in winter to 110° (or even higher) in summer. On the borders of Puget Sound, as at Seattle and Tacoma, the winter cold is not severe, and there is but little snow. The precipitation over most of the region W. of the Cascade Range is very heavy rising in some places to 140 and 150 inches in a year whereas in the region E. of it the rainfall is over large areas reduced to 16 and 10 inches, and irrigation is a requisite for agriculture.

Agriculture.—Eastern Washington is an admirable region for grazing, and some of its prairie-lands are excellent for agricultural purposes. Indian corn and the peach ripen here. The arable lands of the western section are of an unsurpassed fertility. The enormous forest-growth has thus far interfered to some extent with agricultural progress. Wheat, barley, oats and hay thrive here remarkably and the state has become famous for its fruit, apples particularly. The cultivation of hops is an important industry in the state. The Washington agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat 25,098,667 bu. bel. corn, 196,140 bushels oats, 3,616,226 bushels barley 1,266,267 bushels rye, 20,169 bushels potatoes 1,899,644 bushels and hay 540,481 tons. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 6,454,592 pounds.

Vegetation Animals.—Washington has some of the grandest forests (Douglas pine, spruce, hemlock cedar etc.) in the United States, and supplies vast quantities of timber to different sections of the national domain much of it for the making of spars and ship-trunnings. The redwood is found sparingly. The quantity of lumber cut in 1900 was 1,100,560,000 feet, valued at $11,000,000. The production of shingles was valued at $5,500,000. Among the animals may be mentioned various species of deer bear the mountain-goat, the pronghorn, Rocky Mountain sheep, puma, lynx, and many fur-bearing animals, as well as the prairie-dog, the skunk and other minor rodents. The rattlesnake and many harmless reptiles are found, and in some places the former is exceedingly abundant.

Fisheries.—Canned and salted salmon are important articles of export, salmon of several kinds being taken in great abundance. In the streams trout are very numerous. There seems to be an exhaustive supply of herring also as well as of the minnow (or candle-fish). Oysters are largely shipped from Shoalwater Bay. Among other products of the fisheries are the rock fish, turbot sole, and fishes called perch cod, and bass, but not closely related to the fishes known by those names in Atlantic waters.

Industries.—The leading industries of the state include lumbering (products of all kinds, including wash and doors etc., valued in 1900 at $31,543,640) milling (flour and grit-mill products $6,875,672) fish canning and preserving ($4,831,038) feeding and machine-making ($3,257,943) dairying ($1,190,330) ship- and boat building ($1,595,649).

Railroads.—In 1890 there were in the state 1999 miles of railroad in operation. In 1900 2950 miles.

Education.—The University of Washington the leading educational institution of the state, is located at Seattle. Other institutions are the Puget Sound University at Tacoma, the State Agricultural College and School of Science at Pullman, Gammon College at Spokane, and Whitman College at Walla Walla. There are several state normal schools.

Government.—The governor and the principal officers hold office for 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of the former being elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 3 representatives to the lower house of Congress.

Cities.—The counties were in 1900 36 in number as follows: Adams, Asotin, Chelan, Clallam, Clark, Columbia, Cowlitz, Douglas, Ferry, Franklin, Garfield, Island, Jefferson, King, Kittitas, Kootenai, Lewis, Lincoln, Mason, Okanogan, Pacific, Pierce, San Juan, Skagit, Shastana, Snohomish, Spokane, Stevens, Thurston, Wahkiakum, Wallawalla, Whatcom, Whitman and Yakima.

Cities.—The chief cities are Seattle (pop. in 1900 80,611) Tacoma (" 14) both important financial and business centres on Puget Sound. Spokane, in the E. with extensive water power (36,343) Hollinghous, Walla Walla, Everett, Bellingham, and Olympia the capital (49,351).

Indians.—There were in the state in 1900 7526 tribal Indians, most of whom were attached to reservations.

The pop. in 1840 was 11,894 in 1870 71,956 in 1890 75,116 in 1900 349,790 in 1900 518,103.

History.—Washington formerly a part of Oregon was organized as a territory in 1854 and received practically its present limit in 1843. In 1843 the San Juan Islands which had been long claimed by both the United States and Great Britain were awarded to the former by Emperor Wilhelms of Germany to whom the dispute was referred. Washington became a state in 1889.

Washington, a city capital of the United States in the District of Columbia with which it is contemporary and on the Potomac River. In lat. (Astronomical Observatory of the Smithsonian Institution) 38° 55' 17" N. and lon. 77° 1' 34" W. from Greenwich. The city is on the Pennsylvania (Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington) the Baltimore and Ohio the Southern and other railroads, 40 miles SW of Baltimore, 136 miles SW of Philadelphia, and 326 miles SW of New York.

Washington is situated on the left bank of the Potomac River at the head of tide and of navigation (130 miles from Chesapeake Bay) and was originally embraced between two tributaries, the East Branch (or Anacostia River) on the E. and Rock Creek on the W. the latter separating it from Georgetown. The plan of the city was made in anticipation of a great metropolis, and the comprehensive design of the architect Major L. Enfant, made in 1791 is now in process of full execution a magnificent scheme of public improvements having been recently inaugurated.

The city was laid out with the Capitol Hill for a centre and with rectangularly-disposed streets having E.-W. and N.-S. directions, intersected by a number of diagonally-disposed and radiating avenues of great width. Many of the latter are bordered by beautiful mansions and traverse open circles, in which have been erected monuments to the most distinguished in the nation's annals. The most famous of these avenues is Pennsylvania Avenue, 160 feet wide the main arm of which connects the Capitol with the Treasury building. Other prominent avenues are Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. The principal business thoroughfare is F Street NW. The city is supplied with the greatest abundance of water which is brought from the Great Falls of the Potomac, some 16 miles distant, by a conduit which passes over the famous Cabin John Bridge.

Foremost in architectural merit and in point of interest among the public holdings of Washington is the Capitol, situated on an eminence (sloping abruptly toward the W.) 80 feet above the Potomac. It consists of what is known as the Centre Capitol and of two extensions or wings. The principal front, facing towards the E., presents three splendid Grecian porticoes. The centre building which is of freestone, was commenced in 1793, when the corner-stone was laid by Washington. The extension of pure white marble was commenced in 1851 under President Fillmore. The whole building is 751 ft. long and covers an area of 34 acres. A rotunda, 96 ft. in diameter, in the centre of the building is surmounted by a huge dome of iron upon the top of which is Crawford a bronze statue of Liberty the head of which is 287 ft. above the basement of the Capitol. This rotunda is filled with historical paintings, such as the Declaration of Independence, the Surrender of Burgoyne, the Surrender of Cornwallis, and Washington Resigning his Commission at Annapolis all by Trumbull. The Embarkation of the Pilgrims from Leyden by Weir, the Landing of Columbus by Vanderlyn; the Baptism of Pocahontas by Chapman and the Discovery of the Mississippi by Powell. Other apartments of note in the Capitol are the Senate chamber in the N. extension, the hall of the House of Representatives in the S. extension, the old Senate chamber, the new Supreme Court room in the central building and the old hall of the House of Representatives, now devoted to collections of historical statues. The total cost of the building with its various modifications has amounted to about $18,000,000. East of the Capitol is the new Congressional Library a vast and sumptuous structure in the Italian Renaissance style erected in 1888-97 at a cost of $6,180,000. It measures 470 ft. in length and 340 ft. in width and contains at the present time over 800,000 books and 250,000 pamphlets. One and a half miles N.W. of the Capitol is the President's house, or Executive Mansion commonly known as the White House, built of freestone and surrounded by extensive grounds. Near this on the E. is the Treasury building, an immense edifice in the Grecian style, 510 ft. long by 280 ft. wide. Other edifices of note are the fine building W. of the White House in which are accommodated the State Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department, measuring 561 ft. in length and 242 ft. in breadth, the Land Office (formerly the General Post Office) of white marble, the Patent Office with a great Doric portico, the building of the Smithsonian Institution devoted to scientific research and the promotion of useful knowledge, a structure 450 ft. long by 140 ft. wide, built of red sandstone, in the Norman style, the building of the Department of Agriculture and the United States National Museum situated in the Smithsonian Park. In the latter named is housed an enormous collection of economic products, objects of national history and the products of art and manufactures. Other institutions are the Army Medical Museum with valuable pathological collections, the botanical garden and the zoological gardens, located in the Rock Creek tract. The city is the seat of the national surveys (geologic, geographic, hydrographic, coast and geodetic, ethnologic, etc.) of various general scientific associations (National Geographic Society, Washington Academy of Sciences, Biological Society, Anthropological Society, etc.) the Carnegie Institute, the National Academy of Sciences, and the International Bureau of the American Republics.

Washington is the seat of the United States Naval Observatory, the Signal Office, the Weather Bureau, Government Asylum for the Insane of the army and navy and the District of Columbia, and Soldiers Home for the disabled soldiers of the regular army. Here also are many noteworthy institutions of learning, including George Washington (formerly Columbian) University (Baptist), Georgetown University (Roman Catholic), Howard University (non-sectarian and open to both sexes regardless of color), the National Deaf-Mute College and the Catholic University of America. Among the remaining institutions is the Corcoran Art Gallery founded and endowed by W. W. Corcoran and containing a notable collection of paintings and statuary. Of the numerous monuments of the city the most famous and imposing is the Washington Monument, a giant obelisk of marble which rises to a height of 555 feet. It was begun in 1848 and completed in 1884 at a total cost of $1,500,000. About 1½ miles SE of the Capitol is the United States Navy Yard. Washington is connected with the opposite bank of the Potomac by Long Bridge. On the Virginia shore, overlooking the city is Arlington with the beautiful National Cemetery. About 15 miles below the city is Mount Vernon, the home of Washington.

The resident population of Washington proper in 1870 was 109,199; in 1890 147,201; in 1900 188,932; in 1906, 218,198. Washington proper and Georgetown had in 1906 232,745 inhabitants. The population of the District of Columbia in that year was 273,718. A poll census of the District of Columbia taken in 1905 returned a population of 225,346, of whom 65,834 were colored. Among the buildings now (1905) in course of erection are the new office-buildings of the Senate and House of Representatives, the new city-hall, and the vast Union railway station, a marble pile estimated to cost $15,000,000.

The site for the national capital was chosen at the original suggestion of President Washington but not without opposition. The act making the selection was passed in July 1790, and in 1800 the seat of government was removed thither from Philadelphia. In 1814 the city was entered by the British, who set fire to the Capitol, President's House, and other public buildings. In July 1864 the city was threatened by a Confederate force under Early. The treaty of Washington for the settlement of the Alabama question was concluded in 1871. See DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Schiller monument in bronze stands in front of the theatre. On the Herder Platz rises the Peter Pauls- (or Stadt-) Kirche, built in the fifteenth century with a superb altar piece by the older Cranach. Herder is buried in the church and his monument is in front of it. The grand-deal palace with interesting frescoes, occupies the site of the edifice erected partly under Goethe's supervision. Near it stands the building containing the Goethe and Schiller archives. Opposite the modern Gothic town hall is the house occupied by the painter Cranach. The Weiland monument and Goethe's Garden house in the attractive park on the banks of the Ilm are other reminders of the time of Weimar's literary splendor. On an elevation W of the park is the Belvedere, a chateau with pleasure-grounds, commanding a fine view. The cemetery contains the grand-deal vault, in which rest Schiller and Goethe.

Weimar has many institutions of learning, among them an art school, an industrial school, a music school etc. The museum contains some famous pictures by Holbein, Lucas Cranach etc. and Preller's mural paintings from the Odyssey. bridge Gulf, on the W., NW, and N.,—but there are few serviceable natural harbors, and navigation is much hampered in places by the great rise of the tidal waters (in Cambridge Gulf, 26 feet King Sound, 44 ft.) Large harbor works are being constructed at some of the ports.

The interior and greater part of Western Australia is a plateau of moderate altitude, 700-1000 feet in general elevation and rising in places to perhaps twice this height. It forms part or is a continuation of what has been termed the great Austral Plain which gives evidence of having been at a comparatively recent geological period a sea-bed, and of marking an oceanic separation between the eastern and western sections of what is to-day the Australian continent. Almost the whole of this interior region is desert or sand-covered plain with little or no vegetation over large areas, or with dense scrubs of acacia, crowded into more favored spots, and the characteristic peracpine-grass or spinifex. There are no permanent water-courses, and the numerous so-called lakes are mostly dry during the greater part of the year being turned into water-basins only with the coming of the rains. This interior region, which constitutes the greater part of the Eastern Division of the colony has the Great Victoria Desert in the S, the Gibson Desert to the centre, and the Great Sandy Desert in the N.

A region of lofty highlands or mountains borders the western coast-line, or lies off from it at a distance of 30-100 miles, and other mountains appear behind these, and still others occupy the major part of the Northern or Kimberley Division. The relations of these different mountains to one another have not yet been definitely ascertained nor are their relations to the structure of the continent fully understood. Among the better-known of the individual ranges are the Darling Heracles and Victoria ranges in the SW presenting no summit much exceeding 1500 feet in height the Stirling Range, inland from Albany (3500 ft.) Lookyer and Capricorn ranges in the central west and the King Leopold, Müller and McIlhenny ranges in the N (Kimberley Division)—2000-2500 (?) ft. Individual summits are mountains Angustus (3500 ft.) and Labouchere (3400 ft.) both in the official Western Division.

The water-courses of the W part of Western Australia are numerous and comprise among the better known (beginning at the SW and proceeding northward) the Swan River (at the mouth of which is Fremantle) the Murchison Gascoyne, Ashburton Fortescue, De Grey Fitzroy and Ord rivers. The Swan alone is important, the others for the most part lacking water in the dry months. The climate is hot in the northern parts and in the interior but not unhealthy and in the far south a generally agreeable temperature prevails. December January and February are the hottest months, and June and July when a mild winter prevails, the coolest. A temperature below 30 has been noted in the far interior. The annual rainfall ranges from about 30 inches to the extreme NW (Perth 35 inches Kimberley 20 inches Coolgardie district, 19 inches) to practically nothing in the interior.

The more productive regions of the colony are in the SW and W where there are large areas of noble forest (of eucalyptus or blue-gum sandal-wood jarrah karri etc.) yielding good and serviceable timber and lands well adapted to grazing purposes and to agricultural pursuits. The ordinary crops of the north temperate zone (wheat, barley, oats, clover, potatoes hay etc.) do well and there is considerable cultivation of the apple, peach orange, lemon guava, and other fruits. The total area of the state under cultivation in 1904 was 283 752 acres, of which 137 946 was under wheat (yielding 1 876,262 bushels). The live-stock in 1903 included 2,599 633 sheep 497 617 cattle, 82,747 horses, besides numbers of pigs and goats, and 2631 camels. The wool-crop of that year amounted to 12 501 844 pounds, valued at $443,743. The chief resources of the state are in its wool, timber and mineral wealth the last-named represented by deposits spread over a vast extent of territory stretching almost continuously from the Kimberley region in the N to Dundas in the S and eastward from near the W coast to the meridian of 120° and 130° E longitude. The more productive gold-fields are those of Kimberley and Pilbarra in the N and NW Ashburton, Peak Hill and Murchison in the W and Coolgardie and Dundas in the S. Gold was first discovered in this region in 1866. Up to and inclusive of the year 1903 (when the production was 2,064,582 fine ounces) the gold output was 10 933,141 fine ounces, valued at $46,441 633. In June, 1904 there were in the state 2161 miles of railway in operation.

The settlement of Western Australia was begun in 1829. On Jan. 1 1891, the colony became a state of the Commonwealth of Australia.

West Indies, or Antilles, an extensive system of islands in the Atlantic Ocean forming the northern and eastern boundary of the Caribbean Sea and stretching in a easterly form from near the NE extremity of Yucatan and southeastern Florida to the Gulf of Paria, in Venezuela and westward from this point along the N coast of the South American continent to the Gulf of Venezuela. The Bahama Islands although sometimes excluded are properly members of the West Indies but will not be considered here. (See BAHAMAS.) The islands (without the Bahamas) lie broadly between the parallels of 10° and 23° 30' N lat. and the meridians of 80° and 85° W lon. They comprise a number of groups to which distinctive names (mostly without a physiographic reference) have been given: 1 the Greater Antilles (comprising Cuba, Haiti, Jamaica and Porto Rico and some minor associated islands); 2 the Lesser Antilles (sometimes designated Caribbean Islands) the line of islands extending southward from (and including) the Virgin Islands (immediately E. of Porto Rico) to Trinidad, and divided into a northern or Leeward and a southern or Windward section; and 3 the Yucatan or Looe Islands (Margarita, Nueva Ayra, Curaçao, etc.) (For a more extended notice of these different groups, see ANTILLES, CARIBBEAN, LEeward ISLANDS, WINDWARD ISLANDS, and VIRGIN ISLANDS also the special notions of CUBA, HAWAII, JAMAICA etc.) The West Indian islands are, in the opinion of many geologists, the disrupted parts of a former continuous land-mass, or specifically the remains of a section of the northern Andes whose continental continuation is to be found in the northern border mountains of Venezuela, and whose eastern termination is the peninsula of Florida. The islands of the Greater Antilles are fundamentally of sedimentary construction with ancient granite and volcanic cores and intruded sheets, and plunge in some parts with extraordinary steepness into the sea (Sierra Maestra, in the S of Cuba, the N coast of Porto Rico, Haiti). The mountain slopes carried to the embosomable bases where they are implanted can properly be said to measure 20 000-25 000 feet. Mount Tins (or Loma Tins) NW of the city of Santo Domingo, about 10 300 ft. in height is the loftiest elevation of the entire West Indies. The Lesser Antilles (or eastern West Indies) are arranged in double series,—an outer (or eastern) and an inner (or western) the latter being almost wholly volcanic (Montserrat, St. Christopher, Nevis, Guadeloupe, Dominica, Martinique, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Grenada, and some others) with individual some rising to 3500-4500 (2000') ft., and nearly all giving evidence of recent activity (See PALM MARY and SO. FRANK). There is reason to believe that the Greater Antilles were united and at a no very distant geological period with Central America on the lines of shallows that are indicated by the Great and Little Cayman and Mistrum banks, NW of Cuba and the great Jamaican-Honduras bank or plateau. Two of the major breaks in the continuity of the West Indian islands form to-day the Windward Passage between Cuba and Haiti and the Mona Passage between Haiti (Santo Domingo) and Porto Rico. Evidence of comparative recent uplift are to be found in nearly all the islands in their terraces or raised beaches. The climate of the whole is tropical but modified by the surrounding ocean and the elevated surface of many of the islands. The eastern side of the Lesser Antilles is temperal by the continuous trade-winds. The products are sugar, tobacco, cacao, coffee, logwood, pimento, ginger, arrowroot, tropical fruits of many kinds, sponges, etc. Some of the minor islands have yielded much gum. Columbus landed on Hispaniola (probably Watling's Island) in the Bahama group in Oct. 1492 and the archipelago under the erroneous impression at the time of his discovery that it formed part of Asia, was called the West Indies.

The following table shows the countries to which the main island is belong

Westphalia, west-fā lə-ə (See Westphalen, Westfā lə-ə) a province of Prussia, bordering on the Netherlands. It lies NE of the Rhine Province and S of Hanover. Area, 7885 sq. m. The surface is mostly mountainous and hilly, with an extensive level tract in the NW reaching to the Netherlands. The greatest elevation near the SE. border, is about 2700 feet above the sea. The low range of mountains called the Teutoburger Wald extends along the NE. border. About one-half of the surface is drained by the Rhine through its affluents, the Lippe and Ruhr the latter of which receives the Lahn. The easternmost part is watered by the Weser, and the Ems has its upper course in the northern part. Somewhat more than one-fourth of the area of the province is covered with forests. The soil presents every variation of fertility and unproductiveness.

The land-holdings are mainly small, the peasant-proprietor class being very large. The chief cereals in the order of their acreage and product are rye, oats, and wheat. Potatoes are extensively cultivated and the province is noted for its flax. Large numbers of cattle and swine are reared. The hams of Westphalia are celebrated. Westphalia is noted for its mineral wealth. It has some of the richest coal-fields in the world, the annual product exceeding 40,000,000 tons. It is also a great iron-district and yields much zinc and copper. Vast quantities of sulphuric acid are produced from the pyrite mined in the province. Westphalia is one of the most important manufacturing districts of the European continent. It is a great seat of the linen industry and other textiles are also extensively manufactured. The iron-industry is on a vast scale.

The population in 1900 was 3,187,777 about equally divided between Catholics and Protestants. The Jews number a little more than 20,000. The capital is Münster which is the seat of a university. The province is divided into the three government-districts of Münster, Minden and Arnberg.

In the early part of the Middle Ages the western third of the land of the Saxons (the original Saxony, which extended from the lower Elbe southward almost to the Rhine) appears under the name of Westphalia. The eastern third was called Eastphalia, and the middle section Engern. Later the name Westphalia came to designate a duchy ruled by the electors (archbishops) of Cologne. It was a district in the SE part of the present province of Westphalia. Here the electors ruled down to 1803. Parts of Westphalia passed into the possession of Brandenburg (the nucleus of the Prussian kingdom) in the seventeenth century. By the acts of the Congress of Vienna (1814-15) all of Westphalia became Prussian. One of the orders of the Holy Roman (German) Empire was called the Westphalian Circle. The general treaty of peace terminating the Thirty Years War negotiated at Osnabrück and Münster (both in the circle of Westphalia) and signed at Münster on Oct. 24 (new style) 1648 is known as the Peace of Westphalia.

West Point (officially Westposet) a post-village of Orange co. N. Y. on the right or W bank of the Hudson River where that stream passes through the Highlands in a narrow and tortuous pass about 50 miles N. of the city of New York on the West Shore R. Lat. of observatory, 41° 23' 22" N. lon. 73° 57' 30" W. It is the site of the United States Military Academy which was established here (pursuant to a recommendation made years before by Washington) in 1802. The natural strength of the place led to its selection for a fortress during the Revolutionary War and the ruins of Fort Putnam which was constructed at that period crown a hill (a little to the SW of the extreme point) of 595 feet elevation above the river. The principal buildings of the academy—which comprise officers' quarters, cadet barracks, academic buildings, library superintendent's office, mess- and riding halls, hospital, Cullum Memorial Hall (containing military trophies, paintings, etc.)—and the beautiful parade-ground occupy a plateau elevated about 180 ft. above the river and cover in their distribution an area of some 200 acres. Fort Clinton and the other works that constituted the fortress at the period of the Revolutionary War occupied the same plateau and were defended by redoubts on the summits of the hills of which Fort Putnam was the chief. The fortifications were laid out by the Polish patriot Kosciuszko. Benedict Arnold was placed in command of this fortress in 1780 and he immediately proceeded to carry out a plot to surrender it into the hands of the British. His treason came to naught through the capture of Major André. During the Revolutionary War a chain was stretched across the river at this point to prevent the passage of the enemy's ships. The site of West Point commands probably one of the finest river views in the world.

West Virginia, an east-central state of the American Union lying in the Appalachian region and bounded on the N and NE by Pennsylvania and Maryland, on the SE and S. by Virginia, and on the W. by Ohio (from which it is separated by the Ohio River) and Kentucky (separated by the Big Sandy River). Area 24,780 sq. m. It is of irregular outline, and lies out to the northward a narrow projection between Ohio and Pennsylvania, known as the Panhandle. The Potomac River forms the major part of the boundary with Maryland while main ridges of the Alleghany Mountains define the border with Virginia.

Face of the Country—Much of the surface is mountainous being traversed in the E and centre by parallel ridges of the Alleghany Mountains direct continuations of the mountains of Maryland and Pennsylvania with the usual NE-SW trend of the Appalachian system. The Great North (or Shenandoah) Mountain the corresponding of the more northerly Blue (or Kittatinny) Mountains bounds the Shenandoah Valley on the W. and is succeeded westward by one of the main axes of the Alleghany system of the state. Other more or less parallel and subordinate ridges are known under the names of Cheat, Laurel Greenbrier Cowpasture, Flat Top Rich River Gauley Birch Newell and Meadow mountains. These ridges are generally fertile to the top with wooded sides and often there are splendid natural meadows or glades upon their summits. The mountains generally present most picturesque and occasionally imposing scenery. They maintain a general crest-line of 2,000-3,500 feet elevation, with numerous summits rising to 3,000-4,000 ft. and a few considerably surpassing this altitude. The culminating point of the state is Spruce Knob, 4560 ft. Other summits are High Knob, 410 ft. Big Spruce Knob 4052 ft. Cuninghams Knob, 4385 ft. Casey Knob 4291 ft. Blue Knob 4200 ft. Bank Knob 4256 ft. and Laurel Knob 4292 ft. Westward of the main mountain flows the up-land of the Alleghany Plateau, a largely dissected region of 1000 to 2500 ft. general elevation which falls off westward to the Ohio River where the low level of 650-800 ft. is reached.

Rivers—Almost the entire state belongs to the basin of the Ohio River among whose tributaries are the Big Sandy Guyandotte, Great and Little Kanawha, and Monongahela, streams that are navigable to a greater or less extent, most of them having been artificially improved. Minor rivers are the Tygart Valley Greenbrier New Elk, Cheat Gauley and Jackson. The Shenandoah River flows through a small section of the state in the NE and the Potomac rises by several forks in the N.

Geology—More than two-thirds of the area of the state is overlaid by the coal measures and although the remaining third (comprising the counties bordering on Virginia) is mainly of the Silurian and Devonian ages yet even here there are detached beds of the Carboniferous containing some of the most valuable coals in the state. The principal coals of the state are bituminous and are found in most of the counties westward of the easterly front of the main Alleghany Greenbrier and Great Flat Top mountains. The coals are all excellent and are highly valued for coking. The West Virginia coal field covers 16,000 sq. m. and coal mining is carried on in more than 20 counties. Nearly all the coal mined is from the four mining districts known as the New and Kanawha River, the Elk Garden (or Upper Potomac) the Pocahontas (or Flat Top) and the Fairmont (or Upper Monongahela). In 1903 the quantity of coal mined was 29,337,341 short tons, valued at $24,297,019. West Virginia is one of the largest producers of petroleum, which is obtained from the districts known as those of West Virginia, Potomac, and Pennsylvania. The greater part of the product is piped to Philadelphia and Baltimore. The yield in 1905 was 12,899,395 barrels, valued at $28,555,533. The supply of natural gas is very large, and was in 1905 (valued at $4,533,226) second only to that of Pennsylvania. Among the other mineral resources of the state are salt, obtained in large quantities (245 000 barrels in 1900) from natural brines, limonites from ores, glass-sand, kaolin and, in minor quantity, but little exploited, the ores of copper, lead and zinc. Numerous thermal and medicinal springs are scattered about in the mountain-regions and are largely visited for their curative qualities as centres of pleasure-resorts.

Forests.—A large part of West Virginia is still densely covered with forests of oak, hemlock spruce, ash, tall walnut, poplar, cherry, locust, chestnut, and other timber trees. In 1900 it was estimated that the wooded area still comprised upward of 18 000 sq. m. The lumber and timber products are among the most valuable assets of the state.

Agriculture.—The valleys, the hillsides, and ridges are generally fertile, and the mountain-glades afford excellent pasturage. The southeastern valleys abound in rich blue-grass, and the Panhandle is an extremely fertile agricultural tract. West Virginia produces nearly every crop of the northern and middle sections of the country. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were corn 19 299 708 bushels, wheat, 4 452,895 bushels, oats 2 768 431 bushels, rye, 127 796 bushels, buckwheat 222,958 bushels, potatoes, 5 029 120 bushels, and hay 547 660 tons. The cultivation of orchard fruits is now prosecuted on a large scale.

Manufactures.—The most important industry is the manufacture of iron and steel, confined to Wheeling and its immediate vicinity, the product of which was valued in 1900 at $16,514,311. The second largest industry is that of lumber and the manufacture of lumber and timber products, the value of which (including sash, doors, and blinds) was $12 433 360. The state ranks second in the output of oaks ($3,529 241) and has also extensive manufactures of glass ($1 871 795), leather ($3 210 763), brick, clay, and pottery.

Transportation, etc.—The Ohio River with its tributaries affords an excellent outlet for the products of the state, and the facilities for transportation afforded by it laid the foundation of the prosperity of the state when its railroads had but a short mileage. In 1860 there were 97 miles of rail road to what is now this state. In 1860 352 miles in 1865 365 miles in 1870 387 miles in 1875 415 miles in 1880 694 miles in 1885 1036 miles in 1890 1433 miles in 1900 about 3300 miles.

Counties.—The state is divided into 55 counties, as follows: Barbour, Berkeley, Boone, Braxton, Brooke, Cabell, Calhoun, Clay, Doddridge, Fayette, Gilmer, Grant, Green, briet, Hampshire, Hancock, Hardy, Harrison, Jackson, Jefferson, Kanawha, Lewis, Lincoln, Logan, Mallowell, Marion, Marshall, Mason, Mercer, Mineral, Mingo, Monongalia, Monroe, Morgan, Nicholas, Ohio, Pendleton, Pleasants, Pocahontas, Preston, Putnam, Raleigh, Randolph, Ritchie, Roane, Summers, Taylor, Tucker, Tyler, Upshur, Wayne, Webster, Wetzel, West Wood and Wyoming.

Cities.—The principal cities are Wheeling (pop. in 1900 33,573), Huntington (11 923), Parkersburg (11 708), Charleston (the capital 11 099), Martinsburg (7562), Fairmont (5655), Grafton (4650), Monaca (5362), Bluefield and Benwood. Other noted places are Harpers Ferry and Morgantown.

Education.—The leading educational institutions of the state are the University of West Virginia, at Morgantown which in 1904 had an attendance of 690. Bethany College, at Bethany, and the Morris Harvey College, at Barboursville. There are state or other normal schools at Huntington (Marshall College), Farmington, Olonville, Shepherdstown, West Liberty and Athens. The West Virginia Colored Institute is at Institute.

Government, etc.—The governor and principal executive officers are elected for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of delegates, the members of the former being elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 3 years. West Virginia sends 6 members to the lower house of the national Congress.

The population of what is now West Virginia, in 1860 was 276 688 of whom 18 371 were slaves, in 1875 443 014 in 1880 618,467 in 1890 762 794 in 1900 938 800. In 1900 there were 22 451 foreign-born inhabitants. The negroes numbered 43,499.

History.—On the passage of the ordinance of secession by Virginia in 1861 the people of the western section of the state, in which slavery never had a strong foothold, at once took measures for the organization of a new state government. There was a long-standing political jealousy towards the people of the remainder of Virginia, and a large majority of the inhabitants were friends of the national cause. In 1861 a constitution was framed, in 1862 it was accepted by the people and by Congress, and in 1863 West Virginia became an independent state of the Union.

White Mountains, a division or stem of the Appalachian system of the eastern United States, in Conn., Grafton and Carroll cos., N H. noted for their bold and picturesque scenery and constituting one of the most favored health and pleasure resorts of the national domain. In their dominant masses (or as ordinarily understood) they cover an area of 1200-1300 sq. m. extending from the Connecticut River on the W to the Maine boundary on the E. and from about lat. 43° 45' N. on the E to the Upper 44° 30' N. on the N. The general trend of the system is NE-SW conformable broadly to the trend of the main ridges of the Appalachian Mountains, but extensive denudation has worn deep gorges into the backbone and in part or far eroded the region as to mask the continuity and the relationships of some sections. The major part of the system rises from a plateau of 1500-1600 feet elevation and the most elevated section attains a crest line of 5000-6000 ft. There are few summits that can properly be called peaks, and there are no strictly Alpine features connected with the mountains. Most of the loftier summits are in what is known as the Presidential Range, or the White Mountains proper which extends from the Seacoast on the E northward to the Moose River near Randolph or over a length of 16 miles. The unimpaired point of this section and of the entire system, is Mount Washington, 6283 ft.,—the loftiest summit of the United States E. of the Rocky Mountains and N. of North Carolina or Tennessee. (See Washington Mount.) Other summits of this range (beginning in the N.) are Mount Madison (5339 ft.), Adams (5865 ft.), Jefferson (5723 ft.), Clay (5534 ft.), Monroe (5590 ft.), Franklin (5628 ft.), Pleasant (4780 ft.), Clinton (4275 ft.), Jackson (4812 ft.), and Webster (3878 ft.). A somewhat subordinate section of the broader White Mountains, but one not lacking in the more rugged types of scenery that distinguish some portions of the Presidential Range (Toothmac's Ravine, on the E. slope of Mount Washington the Glen E. of Mount Clay) are the Franconia Mountains, which continue in echelon fashion the main White Mountains eastward and lie between the East Branch of the Pemigewasset River on the SE and different branches of the Lower Ammonoosuc River on the NW. The culminating point of this section is Mount Lafayette (5270 ft.), other summits are Mount Lincoln (5098 ft.), Garfield (or Haystack 4520 ft.), North and South Twin Mountains, Cannon (Profile Mountain), Liberty, Kinsman, Plume etc. (See Franconia Mountains.) Less prominent summits of the White Mountains than those already mentioned, lying off the main ridges, are Star King (2015 ft.) and Washbuck (4026 ft.) near the village of Jefferson. Cherry Mountain 7 miles E. of Jefferson (3800 ft.). Mount Randolph 7 miles W. of Gorham (3250 ft.). Carter Dome 7 miles E. of Mount Washington (4860 ft.). Among the noted places of scenic or general interest besides those already mentioned are the White Mountain, or Crawford Notch, bounding the Presidential Range on the SW. King's Ravine, on the N. slope of Mount Adams, the Franconia Notch E. of Mount Lafayette, etc., the Plume (also in the Franconia Mountains) and the Upper and Lower Ammonoosuc Falls. The summit of Mount Washington reached by mountain railroad commands one of the finest prospects in the eastern United States. The White Mountains are throughout the greater part of their extent lacking in lakes which pre-eminently distinguishes them from the Adirondacks. They were until a comparatively recent period densely covered with forest, of which considerable areas still remain. Geologically they represent some of the oldest patches of land on the continent, being formed of Archæan (Montalban, Huronian) strata. During the Glacial Period nearly all the summits were buried beneath ice, and there are still extensive deposits of drift remaining. Among the more frequented resort towns and villages are Franconia, Sugar Hill, Littletown, Bethlehem, Whitefield, Jefferson, Lancaster, Gorham, Jackson, North Conway and Intervale. The most important industrial town in the region is Berlin.

Its southern boundary is the parallel of 42° 30' N. lat., the northern limit, including the Apostle Islands, is in lat. 47° 3' N. The rivers Montreal and Menominee separate it in part from the northern peninsula of Michigan, and its western boundary is for the most part washed by the St. Croix and Mississippi rivers. There are in Lake Superior and Michigan some important islands belonging to Wisconsin. Area of the land-surface, 54,650 sq. m. of the surrounding waters, 1599 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—Wisconsin is an elevated rolling country of woodland and prairie in general from 600 to 1000 feet in elevation and with few points rising above 1500 ft. The Penokee Range, which has structural relations with the Mineral and Gogebic ranges of Michigan, presents, with its continuations in the N.W. and N. probably the loftiest elevations in the state (about 1700 ft.) Minor elevations are found in the Menominee Range in the NE. Numerous low limestone hills, or hog backs, interspersed with farms and lakes or surrounding kettle-holes, have impressed a distinctive physiognomy upon the land-surface, and bear testimony to past glacial action and to a broad distribution of glacial drift. The state is crossed by several ridges or water-sheds, which separate the various river-basins from one another. In the SW a portion of the country is hilly and broken.

Lakes and Rivers.—Wisconsin contains a large number of lakes most of which are of small size. The largest lake is Winnebago in the E which is connected by Fox River with the Green Bay arm of Lake Michigan. W of it is Lake Koyan. The Fox Lakes of Madison are famed for their beauty. Devil's Lake, a small sheet of water near Baraboo, lies in a wild and picturesque rock basin. The principal rivers of Wisconsin are the St. Croix, Chippewa, Black, and Wisconsin (which afford considerable steam navigation, although encumbered by rapids and shifting sands) tributary directly to the Mississippi. The Koshong, Rock and Des Plaines, flowing into Illinois and the Menominee, Peshtigo, Oconto, and Fox, flowing into Green Bay. The Fox River is connected at Portage City with the Wisconsin by a short canal. Many of the rivers have deep rocky cañons (here called dells or dells) through which the water rushes in a rapid course, affording much water power which is extensively utilized.

Geology.—Virtually the entire state belongs to the Archean and older Paleozoic ages. The ancient granitic gneisses, and their associates occupy much of the northern section, while southward of this tract, and again on the Lake Superior slope, appear the newer sedimentary rocks (Cambrian, Silurian), which prevail over most of the rest of the state. Glacial drift covers the greater part of the surface of the state. The Gogebic and Menominee areas in the N and minor patches in the E are rich in iron-ore and have given to the state an important mining industry. In 1900 the output of iron-ore in the state was 679,780 long tons valued at $377,767 mostly coming from the Gogebic district; the quantity of iron (nearly all red hematite) mined in 1900 was 676,063 tons, valued at $1,622,617. Copper, lead, and zinc-ores have been worked at several points. Bituminous limestones and valuable cement-rocks abound in various parts.

Climate, etc.—The winters are long and severe, especially in the north but the dryness and uniformity of the weather under the winter climate far more moderate than that of the northeastern states. Proximity to the Great Lakes serves to temper both the summer and winter cli-

Worms, Worms (anc. Borbolemagus; mod. L. Formacia), a town of the grand-duchy of Hesse, Germany on the left bank of the Rhine, 36 miles SE of Mainz. It is an ancient place and the old quarter contains various interesting mediæval relics. The venerable cathedral, consecrated in the twelfth century with its four round towers and two domes, is a striking example of Romanesque architecture. The Pennekirche, whose main portion dates from the twelfth century contains the Paulus museum of Germanic antiquities. Still more ancient is the synagogue (now modernized) one of the oldest in Germany. The late-Gothic Lutherauskirche, in the shape of a cruciform basilica, was consecrated in the fifteenth century. On the Lutherplatz is a fine monument to Luther by Bismarck and near by is the Heyl house, a handsome modern edifice, on the site of the episcopal palace where Luther appeared before the imperial diet in 1521. Among other modern structures the Romanesque Wormskathedrale is one of the most striking. A handsome new quarter has arisen to the W of the town. Some of the towers of the old fortifications are still preserved. The industries of Worms are considerable. They include the manufacture of leather textiles, chlorey machinery chemicals bone-dust, etc. Choice wine (Lutherauskirche) is produced in the vicinity. Pop. in 1906, 40,785.

Worms is one of the most ancient cities of Germany. It was the capital of the Burgundian realm which existed at the time of the fall of the Roman Empire. It very early became the seat of a bishopric. It became flourishing under its bishops, against whose authority it successfully rebelled, becoming a free city and figures prominently in the mediæval annals of the Holy Roman (German) Empire as the meeting place of imperial diets. The famous Concordat of Worms between the Emperor Henry V and Pope Callixtus II which put an end to the contest regarding investitures, was concluded in 1122. The most celebrated of the diets held at Worms was that of 1521 before which Luther made his defiant stand. In 1689 the city was burned to the ground by the French. It was ceded to France in the treaty of Lunéville in 1801, and was assigned to Hesse-Darmstadt by the congress of Vienna in 1815.

Württemberg, 4100 ft., a kingdom in the SW part of Germany the third state in size of the German Empire, and the fourth in order of population, bounded on the E by Bavaria on the NW W and NW by Baden and on the S by the Prussian province of Hohenzollern and the Lake of Constance. Württemberg has some small ex-slaves in Baden and Hohenzollern. It is divided into the circles of the Neckar, Black Forest (Schwarzwald), Danube, and Jagst Area, 7528 sq. m. Pop. in 1900, 2,189,480. About 70 per cent of the population is Protestant. The principal towns are Stuttgart (the capital), Ulm, Heilbronn, Reutlingen, Cannstatt, and Reutlingen.

The surface of the country is largely mountainous. In the SW is part of the Black Forest, one of whose peaks the Hohenstaufen, about 3000 feet in height, is the loftiest mountain in Württemberg. The Swabian Alps stretch from Hohenzollern about 80 miles NE, uniting on the SW with the Black Forest, and separating the basins of the Neckar and the Danube, the two principal rivers. The chief outlets of the Neckar are the Kocher, Jagst, and Enz. The Danube traverses Württemberg in a NE direction. Its largest tributary is the Iller on the Bavarian border. About one-fifth of Lake Constance belongs to Württemberg; the next largest lake is the Federsee, in the S.

The climate is temperate, the mean annual temperature being about 47°. The soil is mostly fertile, especially in the picturesque valleys of the Neckar and the Tauber, and on the Lake of Constance, in which regions the cultivation of the vine is successfully carried on. The Neckar wines are the best. Fruit-trees thrive everywhere. The chief agricultural products are grain, wheat, potatoes, hops, tobacco, flax and hemp. The Black Forest yields valuable timber. Bee-keeping is extensively carried on and the fisheries are considerable. Iron-ore and salt are the most important mineral products. The salt-works and a number of foundries are owned by the state. There are rich quarries of building stone. Among the mineral springs those of Wildbad are the most famous.

Although Württemberg is mainly an agricultural country many of its industries have reached a high degree of development, such as the manufacture of gold and silverware, machinery, clocks, pianos, organs, surgical and optical instruments, paper, chocolate, and artistic furniture. Stuttgart is the most important publishing centre in southern Germany and the establishments connected with the graphic arts enjoy a high reputation. There are large sugar refineries, brick yards, and breweries, and the manufacture of textiles, chemicals, dye-stuffs, cement, gunpowder, cotton thread, metal ware, hosiery, and sparkling wine is carried on extensively.

Württemberg has long been noted for the excellence of its higher educational establishments and the general diffusion of public instruction. The University of Tübingen is celebrated. The technological and agricultural schools are among the foremost of their kind and the conservatory of music at Stuttgart has a world-wide reputation.

The government of Württemberg is a constitutional monarchy. The constitution dates from 1819. The legislature consists of 2 chambers. The first is composed of princes of the blood, nobles, and members appointed by the king. The second chamber is composed of 15 members of the lower nobility, 11 Evangelical and 3 Catholic dignitaries, the chancellor of the university of Tübingen, 1 representative of towns and 63 representatives of rural districts, the last-named 70 members being chosen by direct election. There is universal suffrage and the ballot is secret. Württemberg has 4 seats in the Bundesrat and sends 17 members to the Reichstag. The medieval county of Württemberg was erected into a duchy in 1495. The state was elevated to the rank of a kingdom in 1806. In 1871 it became a member of the new German Empire.

It is one of the oldest cities in Germany. The Romanesque cathedral, with a richly decorated choir, dates from the eleventh century. The handsome Gothic Marian kapelle begun in the fourteenth century contains interesting statues. The Neomünster church dating from the eleventh century has a fine Romanesque tower and contains a tablet in memory of the ministerial Walter von der Vogelweide whose tomb was in the old cloister, demolished in 1823. The venerable church of St. Burkard, erected in the eleventh century is externally the best preserved of the old ecclesiastical structures. The town-hall has a council room which is a striking example of medieval architecture. The royal palace, formerly the residence of the bishops of Würzburg is one of the most striking examples of the renaissance style in Germany. The old part of the town is surrounded by attractive promenades. The new quarter contains fine modern edifices. On the Ronndampplatz, the largest square stands the handsome Leitzold fountain erected in 1893. The Domstrasse, one of the principal thoroughfares, leads to the old Main bridge, adorned with statues, which dates from the fifteenth century. The Frankenschanze on the neighboring Nikolausberg (1000 feet high) commands a fine view of the valley of the Rhine and the encircling hills. Opposite the town rises the fortress of Marienberg, on the site of an ancient castle.

Würzburg is rich in educational institutions. The university had 1368 students in 1904. The buildings contain zoological, mineralogical and geological collections, an art-history museum, a collection of sculptures, coins and antiquities, and a picture gallery. The town has a botanical garden, a royal music school and institutions for the blind, deaf-mute, etc. The Carl Julius Hospital founded in 1875 is an admirably equipped institution. The industries of Würzburg are varied and include the manufacture of machinery, printing, paper, tobacco, sparkling wines, vinegar liquors, and chocolate, and beer brewing. Excellent wine is produced in the vicinity. Pop. in 1900, 73,400.

Wyoming, wyo-ming, a western state of the American Union, bounded on the N by Montana, E by South Dakota and Nebraska, S by Colorado and Utah and W by Utah, Idaho, and Montana. Its boundaries are the parallels of 41° and 45° N lat and the meridians of 104° 3' and 111° 3' W lon. Area of the land-surface, 97,890 sq. m. of the appertaining waters, 315 sq. m.

Face of the Country—The state belongs to the great plateau region that abuts against and is partially traversed by arms of the Rocky Mountains, and its general surface is elevated 5000-7000 feet or more above the level of the sea. The main chain of the Rocky Mountains, known in its central and dominant mass as the Wind River Range, extends in a NW-SE direction through a large part of the state and constitutes the water parting (continental divide) between the streams flowing to the Atlantic and the Pacific basins. The western and southwestern portions of the state are drained principally by the Green and Snake rivers (the former one of the head-streams of the Colorado the latter the chief tributary of the Columbia) and their many tributaries. Among the subordinate ranges of this section of the state are the Salt River Range, the Teton Range (with the Grand Teton 13,671 ft.) the Grosventre Range, the Shoshone Mountains, and the Snow Mountains the last named entering from Montana. In the extreme NW part of the state is almost the whole of the YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK (which see) a wonderland of mountains, canyons, hot springs, and geysers which exhibits the evidences of comparatively recent volcanic action on a magnificent scale. Freemont Peak the highest peak of the Wind River Mountains (13,700 ft.) is also the culminating point of the state. The Atlantic or northeastern slope of the state is drained by the Yellowstone, Big Horn, Powder, Belle Fourche, Cheyenne, and North Platte rivers, and their numerous tributaries,—all direct or indirect affluents of the Missouri. The SE. section of Wyoming is again broken by mountain horst-rows. Between the Medicine Bow spur of the Rocky Mountains on the SW and the Laramie Mountains on the NE lie the great Laramie Plains a cold and elevated region some of whose surrounding peaks are clad with eternal snows. These peaks which fall off gently to the E. and to the W. mark an interruption or break in the continuity of the Rocky Mountain axis. Northward and northward from the Laramie Mountains there is a prairie or pampa region crossed by low anticlines, which connects the Laramie Mountains with the Big Horn Mountains to the N and the Deer Lodge Mountains, with their fantastic volcanic necks, on the NE. Characteristic features in the landscapes of southern Wyoming are the flat topped hills, or buttes rising in valleys or upon plains on often pre-existing the appearance of water-eroded ruined castles, pyramids and mounds. Among the lofty summits of the state not already mentioned are Mount Ledy 11,177 ft. Moran 12,600 ft. Medicine Peak 12,231 ft. Chimney Rock 11,853 ft. and Chauvenet Peak 13,000 ft. The most noted lakes of the state are the large Yellowstone Lake (in the national reserve) Shoshone Lake, the source of the Snake River and Lake Jackson traversed by the Snake River.

Geology—The principal mountain-systems may be said to be composed of a core, or nucleus, of granitic or syenitic rock or quartzite, with borders exhibiting Silurian Devonian Carboniferous, Triassic, Jurassic, Cretaceous, and Tertiary strata. In most of the plains or prairie country is Cretaceous or Tertiary. In the Yellowstone National Park there are abundant evidences of recent volcanic action. Gold and silver are fairly abundant, but the quantity of these metals is insignificant. Some tin-ore (cassiterite) has been obtained in Crook co. Iron is found throughout a large part of the state, and an excellent quality of lignite and bituminous coal of Tertiary origin is mined upon an extensive scale, especially in the SW. This coal supplies the Pacific railroads and much of the population of the plains with a cheap and serviceable fuel. The total product in 1903, obtained chiefly from Sweetwater and Uinta co. was 4,636,793 short tons, valued at $5,751,581. Gypsum, salt, soda, soda-sulphate, graphite, copper (product in 1903 1,032,169 pounds; in 1900 4,230,776 pounds), lead sulphur etc. are other useful mineral products. The yield of petroleum, which appears to be most abundant in the northern and central parts of the state, promises to become important. Mineral waters abound.

Climate—Wyoming enjoys in general a healthful climate, dry in nearly all sections of the state, although the extremes of both summer and winter temperatures are well accentuated. The range of temperature throughout most years is from -35° to 100°, but exceptional winters and maxima considerably extend this range. The mean January temperature at Cheyenne is about 25°. The rainfall, except on the lofty mountains is everywhere deficient, the average precipitation for the state being about 13 inches.

Agriculture, Industries—The principal crops, except Indian corn do well here, but the soil is better suited to turnips, potatoes, peas, beans, and other like crops. The Laramie Plains have short summers and long severe winters. Pastoral pursuits and especially wool-growing, prosper better here than does farm tillage. The soil everywhere requires irrigation to make it productive. Work in this direction is being actively prosecuted and there are already in the state more than 5000 miles of irrigation ditches. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat, 386,414 bushels, corn, 61,702 bushels, oats, 630,272 bushels, potatoes, 388,179 bushels and hay 493,446 tons. At present the mining of coal and the raising and tending of sheep and cattle are the leading industries of Wyoming the state having held in 1900 the second position among the wool-producing states of the Union. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 21,840,231 pounds. The mountains which are generally well wooded with pines and other coniferous trees, afford timber from which lumber and railroad-ties are sawn. Besides this, there is some quartz-milling and considerable railroad-repairing and machine-work are done at the principal towns along the main line of railroad. There is a large amount of water-power developed in the mountains and canyons.

Railroads—The total length of railroads in 1900 was 1063 miles. In 1900 1370 miles.

Education—Laramie is the seat of the state university the University of Wyoming.

Counties and Towns—There are 13 counties, besides the Yellowstone National Park. Albany, Big Horn, Carbon, Converse, Crook, Fremont, Johnson, Laramie, Natrona, Sheridan, Sweetwater, Uinta, and Weston. The largest towns are Cheyenne, the capital, (pop. in 1900 14,987); Laramie, an important industrial and commercial town (8307); Rock Springs (4363); Rawlins, and Evanston in the vicinity of extensive coal mines.

Government etc.—The governor and executive officers are elected for 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of the former being elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. Women have the right of suffrage. Wyoming Territory was organized in 1890 from portions of Dakota, Idaho, and Utah. The state was admitted into the Union in 1890. It sends 1 member to the lower house of the national Congress.

Population—The inhabitants in 1870 exclusive of Indians numbered 9118. The population in 1880 was 20,780. In 1890 69,105. In 1900 92,557 including 1891 Indians located on reservations.

The Marco Polo Mountains separate its upper waters from those of the Hoang ho while the Tania Mountains on the S form the water parting with the Mekong. The river flows SSE. in China proper traverses the province of Yunnan and on the border of Szechuen receives from the N the Ya-long-kiang, which by some geographers is considered to be one of the forks of the Yang-tse-kiang. Most of its course to this point is directed through longitudinal mountain valleys. Thenceforth the Yang-tse-kiang has a very tortuous ENE course through the provinces of Szechuen, Ku-p'ing, Kiang-si (the extreme N part) Ngan-hwei, and Kiang-su and enters the Yellow Sea by an estuary 30 miles across, in lat. $32^{\circ} N$. The Yang-tse-kiang receives numerous affluents in its course through China (Min Kiang-lin Hsu from the N, Wu Heng kan from the S) some of which are navigable for fairly long courses, and by which it drains all the central provinces of China. Enormous quantities of silt are brought down by the river, the discharge of sediment at its mouth being estimated to be about 6,000,000,000 cubic feet annually (about a sixth less than the sediment discharged by the Mississippi River). The river is crossed by the Grand (Imperial) Canal, by which it communicates with the Hoang ho and with most parts of China proper. The tide ascends it to Lake Ho-yang, 450 miles from the sea, and it is accessible to ocean steamers for a further distance of 150 miles, or as far as Hankow River steamboats ascend to Ichang about 150 miles W by N of Hankow (about 500 miles by water) beyond which it is unsuited for navigation, being largely a turbulent stream passing through wild and narrow gorges. Native boats (rafts) are tracked over some parts of these less accessible waters, and the serviceable source of the river is thus extended to Ping-shan-hsien about 1500 miles. The total length of the Yang-tse-kiang is estimated to be about 3000 miles. The fleet of Yang-tse-kiang steamboats comprises some of the largest river steamboats in the world. Among the important cities on the Yang-tse-kiang are Chungking, Ichang, Kiangchow, Hen yang, Hankow, Wu-chang, Chichow, Nanjing, and Chingkiang.

Yellowstone Lake, Wyo., lies at the S base of the Rocky Mountains in the Yellowstone National Park, at an elevation of 7740 feet above the level of the sea. Its greatest length is about 18 miles. Its outlet is the Yellowstone River, which issues from the northern end of the lake. The Upper Yellowstone River enters at the opposite side. This lake is surrounded on several sides by lofty mountains.

Yellowstone Mountains, Mont., a range of mountains extending along the eastern side of the Yellowstone River commencing near the Lower Cañon and ending abruptly in the bend of the Yellowstone, near the entrance of the Shields River. Emigrant Peak is 10 969 feet in height.

Yellowstone National Park, a United States national reserve, intended as a general pleasure-ground and game-preserve chiefly in the NW part of Wyoming with narrow adjacent strips in Montana and Idaho. It covers a surface, as the park proper, about 62 miles in length (from N to S.) and 34 miles in width with an area of 3350 sq. m. To this region as originally circumscribed a forest-preserve of some 2000 sq. m. has been added on the E and the S, giving a full area to the park of somewhat over 5500 sq. m. The Yellowstone National Park is the manifold type of scenery that it presents in its exposition of rare geological and physical phenomena, and in its wondrous display of vivid and bizarre coloring stands alone among the curiosities of nature. Its most distinctive physiographic features are embodied in profound cañons and lofty water-falls vast sheets of superimposed lava, lofty volcanic cones (all extinct) thousands of hot springs (calcareous silicious, etc.) many of them encrusting and depositing sinter and a hundred or more active geysers. Its general surface is a broken lava plateau—an outgrowth of the vast Snake River lava-sheet that were thrown out in the Tertiary period—elevated about 3000 feet above sea-level and surrounded by mountain ridges and buttresses, the most prominent of which are the Gallatin Range on the NW and the Absaroka Range on the E. Among the more prominent mountain summits (nearly all of volcanic character) are Electric Peak in the NW (11,135 ft.) Mount Washburn in the E (10,345 ft.), Cathedral Peak (10,700 ft.), Mount Schurz (10,000 ft.), Mount Langford (10,700 ft.), Mount Dome (10,715 ft.) and Mount Stevenson (10,400 ft.), in the E. and east-centre; Mount Sheridan (10,235 ft.), in the S. and Mount Holmes (10,325 ft.) in the Gallatin Range of the NW. A portion of the 'continental divide' lies in the SW part. The region is drained by the Yellowstone River which enters from the SE (Upper Yellowstone) traverses the Yellowstone Lake (area, 140 sq. m., elevation 7740 ft. above sea-level,—one of the largest of the world's lakes occupying so lofty a situation), and passes out from the park in the central portion of the northern boundary after a turbulent course through deep and wildly romantic cañons. (See Yellowstone River.) Shoshone, Lewis, and Hart lakes, owner bodies of water lie SW of Yellowstone Lake. Among the more notable locations and objects in the preserve are the Falls of the Yellowstone, the Mammoth Hot Springs, in the N with their striking terraces and basins of exquisitely colored calcareous deposits and waters (covering an area of nearly 200 acres temperature of the waters ranging to 185° or more), the Obsidian Cliffs (150-250 ft. in height) S of the Mammoth Hot Springs; and the Norris, Lower Geyser and Upper Geyser basins, which occupy a nearly meridional position in respect to one another in the western part of the park. In these several basins is the finest exhibition of geyser phenomena to be found on the globe. Among the individual geysers may be noted Old Faithful (with a jet 135-150 ft. in height) Beehive (jet, 150-200 ft.) Grand (200 ft.) Giant (250 ft.) Grotto, Castle, Monarch and Fountain. Much the larger part of the park is densely forested (Douglas spruce, yellow pine, poplar, etc.) and in its recesses numerous forms of game and a safe retreat (alk deer bear big horn buffalo cougar etc.) The Madison River one of the forks of the Missouri has its source in the W part of the park.

Yellowstone Park, a post-station in the Yellowstone National Park. The banking point is Livingston, Mont.

Yellowstone River, the largest affluent of the Missouri rises in the Rocky Mountains of Wyoming on the continental divide, to about lat 44° N and lon 109° 30' W. After a course of about 40 miles, it enters Yellowstone Lake (which see) at an altitude of 7740 feet above the sea. Issuing from the northern end of this lake, it runs northward through the Yellowstone National Park, and forms two grand cañons, the Upper and the Lower Falls respectively 110 and 210 ft. high the latter plunging into the abyss known as the Grand Cañon of the Yellowstone, a stupendous and marvellously colored gorge, extending in the course of the river upward of 20 miles, and having a depth between precipitous rocks of 600-1500 ft. Passing through the so-called Third Cañon the river enters Montana, to which it runs northward through a mountainous country. Near the mouth of the Shields River it emerges from the mountains into the plains and runs in an ENE. and NE direction and enters the Missouri a short distance beyond the North Dakota boundary in lat. 47° 50' N. Its length is estimated at 1100 miles. Its mouth is about 2000 ft. above the level of the sea. Steamboats can ascend it to the mouth of the Big Horn, 300 miles or more, during high water. Its largest affluents are the Big Horn and the Powder rivers both of which enter from the right. See YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Yemen, yān-yān, a region of southwestern Arabia (the SW angle of the peninsula), bordering on the Red Sea, and extending southward to the Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb. It adjoins the British Territory of Aden on the S. Since 1899 the region (the Arabic Felix of the Romans) which constituted the Turkish vilayet of Yemen, is comprised in the four vilayets of Asir (sometimes considered to be a part of Hajea), Hodeida, Sana, and Taiz. It covers an area of about 74,000 sq. m. with a population estimated at 750,000. Yemen is generally mountainous in character, with lofty plateau-massifs (8000-10,000 feet) extending into the interior. These mountains are bordered along the Red Sea by low lying parched, and in many places saline plains, which were at one time seemingly the floor of the ocean. These enter into the formation of the littoral, or what here and farther to the N. is known as the Tehama. There is some agriculture, but stock-raising is the principal pursuit. The chief towns are Sana and Damar, in the interior and the ports of Mocha and Hodeida. Much of the best Arabian coffee is associated with this region.

Yenningyung, yān-lū-yōng', a town of Upper Burma, on the Irrawadi, 110 miles SW of Ava. It is a great depot for petroleum, which is obtained here. Pop. about 5000.

Yenilide, a small town of European Turkey, in Macedonia, 25 miles WNW of Saloniki.

Yenikale, yān-ik-ā-lā, a small town and a fortress of Russia, at the E. extremity of the Crimea, on the Strait of Yenikale (or of Kertch) near its N. end, about 6 miles E. of Kertch.

Yenikale, Strait of (now better known as the Strait of Kertch, the Chasmerian Bosphorus of the ancients) the channel connecting the Sea of Anzov with the Black Sea, and separating the peninsula of the Crimea on the W. from the peninsula of Taurus on the E. Its length is about 35 miles. Near its N. entrance it narrows down to a width of between 2 and 3 miles. Where it opens into the Black Sea it is about 6 miles across. In the middle it sends an extensive arm eastward the Bay of Taurus. On the Crimean side are the towns of Kertch and the fortress of Yenikale.

Yenisei, yān-ēi (written also Jenisei) a river of Siberia, and one of the largest rivers of the globe, rises (as generally understood by geographers) as the Ula-Kem in the mountains of northern Mongolia (in about lat. 46° 35' N. and lon. 96° 45' E. It flows at first NW to the Siberian frontier, breaks through the Sayan Mountains in a northerly course, and enters upon the great Siberian plain at Krasnoyarsk whence its course follows the gentle decline of the land in the direction of the Arctic Sea to its mouth in the estuary or Bay of Yenisei, at lat. 70° N. The river has a length of about 3700-3800 miles, throughout the greater part of which it is navigable, its course being mainly within Russian territory. River steamers ascend to Miru-muk (about 1750 miles) while large craft (including ocean steamers) may reach Yenisei. The Yenisei is in general of very considerable width expanding in some of its lower reaches to 4-5 miles, and has a generous depth (as far as the rapids of Olenokskoye not less than 6 fathoms). In the month of May following upon the melting of the snow and ice, the water frequently stands 30 feet or more above normal level. It traverses vast areas of forest-land, and in its lower and middle course inceptible ice-bound plains and tundra. At Krasnoyarsk the river is generally frozen from the middle of November to May and the mouth is rarely open for more than a few weeks in the year so that the river is ill-suited for direct commercial relations with the outside. The chief tributaries of the Yenisei are the Angara or Upper Tunguska (flowing from Lake Baikal, and which should, perhaps, be properly considered to be the main Yenisei) the Stony Tunguska and the Lower Tunguska, all from the right. There are no comparable streams entering from the left. By means of the Kaa, the Ket tributary of the Obi and some smaller waters, the Yenisei is put in direct communication with the more westerly of the great rivers of Siberia. The river is crossed by the Transsiberian railway at Krasnoyarsk. The area of the drainage-basin is estimated to be about 1,000,000 sq. m.

Yenisei, Bay of, the estuary formed by the river Yenisei at its discharge into the Arctic Ocean extends between about lat. 70° and 75° N. It abounds in islands.

Yeniseisk, or Jeniseisk, yān-ēi-shih or yān-ēi-shih, a government of Asiatic Russia, comprised in official maps Siberia, and extending from the Sayan Mountains on the Mongolian frontier on the S. to the Arctic Ocean on the N. and having the governments of Tomsk and Tobolsk on the W. and Irkutsk and the province of Yakutsk on the E. Area, 987,186 sq. m. Pop. in 1897 549,000. Its extent is nearly commensurate with the basin of the Yenisei. Its most northerly point is Cape Tselinakhin (Northeast Cape), the extremity of the Taimyr peninsula, which is also the northernmost point of Eurasia. The region, except in the S. has but few true mountain elevations declining gradually in the direction of the Arctic Sea. It contains much forest-land (of pine, larch, birch, etc.), but it is largely tundra and forest soil beyond lat. 70° N. and there is considerable swamp-land in the NE. Apart from the Yenisei and its tributaries (Angara, Stony, and Lower Tunguska), it is watered by the Pyrenea and Khataga, both of which flow directly into the Arctic Ocean. Various cereals are cultivated and considerable live-stock (including the reindeer) is bred. Gold is and has been extensively mined in the southern sections, and several thousand men are employed in this industry. Capital Krasnoyarsk.

Yeniseisk, a city of Asiatic Russia, on the Yenisei, in lat. 58° 2' N. lon. 22° 16' E. about 210 miles N. by W. of Krasnoyarsk. It has several churches and convents, boys and girls gymnasia, museum and library, and a fairly active trade. Pop. in 1891, 11,739.

Yosemite Valley, a profound gorge or rift of the Sierra Nevada of California, in Mariposa co. about 180 miles E by S of San Francisco, noted for its imposing scenery of stupendous mountain-walls and lofty waterfalls. The valley which is traversed by the Merced River an affluent of the San Joaquin is about 8 miles in length and generally less than a mile in width. Its floor in great part a park-like expanse of flat and partially timbered meadow-land, is elevated about 3500 feet above sea-level, with the surrounding granitic cliffs rising 3000-5000 ft. higher. The valley together with the enclosing mountains, presents evidence of past glaciation on the grandest scale, and it is assumed by many geologists that its peculiar form is primarily the result of glacial wear. Other geologists incline to the view that it represents a sunken trough of the earth's surface. Among the chief scenic features of the valley and its surroundings are the magnificent and nearly vertical cliff known as El Capitan marking the NW entrance to the valley 7613 ft. in height Eagle Peak, 1781 ft. Cathedral Rocks, 8831 ft., Sentinel Rocks, 7605 ft. Sentinel Dome, 8265 ft. (adjacent to which is Glacier Point, a famous point of view 7322 ft.) North Dome, 7535 ft. Half (or South) Dome, the SE. buttress of the valley 8227 ft., and the numerous waterfalls and cascades which are discharged from prodigious heights over the mountain walls. Among these the first place is held by the Yosemite Falls (falls of Yosemite Creek) which in three leaps (Upper Fall, 1436 ft. vertical; Middle Fall 670 ft. Lower Fall 400 ft.) drop nearly half a mile the creek at the point of its upper discharge is 36 ft. in width. Other hardly less picturesque falls are the Bridal Veil Fall, with a vertical leap of 630 ft., Vernal Fall, 350 ft., and Nevada Fall, about 600 ft. Mirror Lake, noted for its beautiful reflections, lies near the foot of the cullen of Tenaya Creek a tributary gorge of the Yosemite.

A distinctive feature of the Yosemite Mountains is their domed form, by some thought to be the result of glacial scour and by others to be irregular rock expanses. A similar feature is distinctive of the glaciated mountains enclosing some of the Norwegian fjords. The Yosemite Valley is part of the California Yosemite State Park, which is enclosed by the larger Yosemite National Park.

Yucatan, yoo-ká-tán, a peninsular land-mass, not very strictly defined in its geographical boundaries, but comprising as ordinarily understood, the Mexican states of Yucatan and Campeche and the military territory (Maritime) of Quintana Roo. In a stricter geographical sense it also includes British Honduras (Belize) and the northern part of Guatemala. It is the southern buttress that chiefly separates the basins of the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea. The Yucatan Channel, which unites these two bodies of water, separates, by a width of some 124 miles, the NE extremity of Yucatan at or near Cape Cotocha, from the SW point of Cuba. Much the greater part of Yucatan (in the narrower conception) is a flat or nearly flat plain, a limestone plateau of very low general elevation (100-150 feet)—whose greatest relief (by some asserted not to exceed 500 ft. by others thought to reach nearly 900 ft.) is found in a low ridge or series of ridges, extending in a NW-SE direction from a position about 24 miles SW of the city of Mérida to beyond Peten, or perhaps (with some breaks) completely across the territory of Quintana Roo. This same plain is extended gulward as a limestone bank (partially of coral formation) to a distance of 125-150 miles or more on the N and W where it falls with comparative abruptness into the greater depths of the Gulf basin. Yucatan proper is almost wholly destitute of running water, the water of precipitation being almost immediately absorbed by the porous limestone rocks or drawn into the numerous sink (caneles, aguadotes) channels, and subterranean basins with which the region abounds, and which hold the water level in places 200-300 ft. or more beneath the actual surface. These canals are the chief source of water supply to the inhabitants, and they are frequently reached by long outcrops of steps and terraced planes. The surface of the country is in great part covered with low scrub and trees (jungle) largely of scabrous forms and in some places has dense matted cactus (cereus etc.). Magnificent forests (mahogany rosewood, and other dye-woods) still remain here and there (Campeche) as reminders of the forest which seemingly covered nearly the whole land at the time of the Spanish conquest, and on the N coast there are extensive mangrove woods (empetoles) and mangrove thickets. The native fauna is tropicopolitan and includes among its forms the jaguar, armadillo, monkey (in the northern woods) and vast numbers of the iguana lizard. The principal agricultural product of the region is henequén (or Sisal hemp) obtained from a species of aloe (Agave sisalensis). Yucatan is rich in ancient ruins—so-called temples, domes, pyramids, etc.—the work of the civilized Mayas, whose construction perhaps does not date farther back than 800-1000 years. Some of the more imposing of such ruins are found at Uxmal, Labna, Loltun, and Chichén Itza. The chief city is Mérida (with Progreso as its port) which is also the capital of the state of Yucatan. The inhabitants consist largely of Indians of Mayan stock.

Yucatan, a state of Mexico, in the peninsula of Yucatan, bordering on the N on the Gulf of Mexico, and having on the SW the state of Campeche and on the SE the territory of Quintana Roo. Area in 1900 (before the separation from it of the territory of Quintana Roo) 33,200 sq. mi. Pop. in 1900 314,687. The surface of the state is generally flat, rising in its southern part, in a ridge running from a point SW of Mérida to (or beyond) Peten, to a height of several hundred feet. There are no running water-courses, but water is obtained from cists and underground passages (caneles or aguadotes) in the cavernous limestone rock (See YUCATAN peninsula). The state contains numerous prehistoric remains, of which the most noted are those of Uxmal. Henequén (or Sisal hemp) is the chief product. Capital Mérida (with Progreso as its port).

Yukon, a banking post-village of Canadian co. Okla. in a grain and fruit region 13 miles E of El Reno, on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R. It has grain-elevators. Pop. about 950.

Yukon, yoo'kon, a judicial district of Canada, occupying its NW part, and having British Columbia (lat. 60° N) on the E, the district of Mackenzie on the E, Alaska (median of 141° W lon) on the W and the Arctic Ocean on the N. Area, 196,976 sq. mi. Pop. in 1901 27,319. The region lies almost wholly in the basin of the Yukon River which traverses it nearly unidually and W and SW of what are assumed to be the true Rocky Mountains, or the main water-parting between the Yukon and Mackenzie basins. It is more or less mountainous throughout with general elevations rising to 2000-4000 feet or more. Near the upper waters of the Yukon W of Lake Marsh mountains Lorne and Lanesdowne attain elevations of 6400 and 6140 ft. respectively and is the extreme SW near the Alaska boundary line, are several granites of the North American continent. Mount Logan (lat. 60° 35' N lon 140° 21' W), about 18,000 (19,500?) ft. Mount Hubbard (lat. 60° 21' N lon 139° 3' W) 16,400 ft. Mount Augusta (lat. 60° 18' N lon 140° 28' W) 14,900 ft. Mount Vancouver (lat. 60° 21' N lon 139° 42' W) 15,617 ft., Mount Cook 15,700 ft. and Mount Newton 15,800 ft. The region bears evidence of having undergone comparatively recent upheaval or tilting. There are no active glaciers, except on the lofty mountains of the SW and possibly in the far northern snow-covered mountains, but the evidences of past glaciation on a most extensive scale are largely present, especially in the northern sections. Among the tributaries of the Yukon are the Hootalingna or Taelin Felly, Stewart, White, and Porcupine, some of which are navigable for minor craft. Steamboats navigate virtually the entire course of the Yukon (See YUCON RIVER). The region is wooded almost to its extreme northern part, and despite the extremely rigorous winters, it gives promise, under the influence of a genial or even hot summer of considerable agriculture, many vegetables and cereals being successfully grown as far N as lat. 64°. The chief resource of the region thus far is its gold which is mined most extensively in the famous Klondike region (See KLONDIKE). The judicial seat of the district is Dawson (which see). An important military post is Fort Selkirk situated at the confluence of the Yukon and Felly rivers.

Yukon Hills, Alaska, a range or series of heights between the valleys of the Yukon and Koyukuk rivers.

Yukon River (known also in its upper course as the Lawren River) one of the largest rivers of the western hemisphere, rises in a number of small streams and runs (Long Deep, and Crater lakes, tributary to Lake Lindeman) on the N side of the Chitoot Pass Mountain in British Columbia, and has for its main forming-basin or reservoir Lake Bennett (crossed by the parallel of 60° N lat) whose surface is 3161 feet above sea-level. From Lake Bennett the river traversing a number of broad expanses or lakes (Tagish Lake, properly a continuation of Lake Bennett, Lake Marsh Lake Lebarge) and falling rapidly pursues a tortuous and generally NW course to about lat. 64° 55' N where (near Eagle) it crosses the Alaska boundary line in lon 141° W. The same general course is continued to Fort Yukon in the region of the great Yukon Flats, situated on the Arctic Circle, where the river flows southward through 17 degrees of longitude to about lat. 61° 51' N and lon 145° W. Here, is what may almost certainly be assumed to be the head of a former delta (submerging the Kurukwin as one of its arms) it turns WNW and then N and empties, through a number of delta channels, into Norton Sound (of Bering Sea) about 66 miles SW of St. Michael. The river has a total length probably slightly exceeding 3200 miles, and then falls from Lake Bennett (or throughout its full navigable course) at the average rate of almost exactly 1 foot per mile. From Dawson, which is situated on the right bank of the river in lat. 64° 2' N and lon. 135° 25' W (elevation, 1200 ft.), and whose distance from the mouth of the river, as now determined, is approximately 1600 miles, the fall in this case is but little over 1 foot per mile; in the course above Dawson, 1 1/2 ft. In its upper course, where the velocity of the current is not infrequently 6-7 miles an hour the river is impeded by several rapids,—the White Horse (lat. 66° 44' N) Five Finger, Kink rapids,—none of which are absolute barriers to steam-navigation except the White Horse (together with the swirl of Miles Cañon). Small steamboats have (at rare intervals) descended the entire series of rapids, but in the up journey an insuperable barrier is presented by the White Horse. A railway now establishes connection between the two navigable sections of the river at this point. The Yukon is in most of its upper course, except in its large lake-like expansions a narrow and shallow stream with a depth of water frequently not exceeding 6-10 ft. or less, and in a measure this characteristic is maintained also in the lower stream, where, however at times of high-water the waters (as in the region of the Flats) may spread over miles of country leaving the main channel of the river among an intricate set-work of banks and islands. At Dawson the width of the stream is ordinarily about a third of a mile. Throughout a large part of Alaska the course of the Yukon is through a dissected low-lying plateau, and is lined by superimposed river-terraces, marking stages of high levels formerly occupied by the stream. The chief tributaries of the river are, in descending order the Tanana (or Hoonahgwa), Big Salmon, Little Salmon, Pelly (discharging opposite Fort Selkirk and by some geographers considered to be one of the forming forks of the main river), White Stewart, Klondike, and Forty Nine emptying in Canadian territory and the Porcupine, Tanana, and Koyukuk discharging in Alaska. The river which is navigated by a large fleet of flat-bottomed steamboats of the Mississippi pattern, is closed to navigation by ice usually between about the middle of October and June. During much of this period it forms an available highway for sledging. The chief entrance channels are those known as the Sphoon and the Kwihpak. At numerous points along the banks of the Yukon supply and trading stations have been located (Andreask, Holy Cross Mission, Asvik, Kaling, Nulato, Tanana, Fort Yukon, Circle, Eagle, etc.—all these in Alaska).

Zambesia, one of the major administrative regions or provinces of Portuguese East Africa, in the valley of the Zambesi River and divided into the two minor sub-provinces or districts of Uchima and Tete.

Zambesi, a river of southern Africa, the fourth in size in the world, rises in the seven springs or fountains in the extreme eastern part of Angola, and flows to the head-waters of the Kasai, the chief southern tributary of the Congo, in lat. 11° 23' 48" S. and lon. 24° 51' E. elevation, 4850 feet. In a vast double curve, whose general trend is SE., it traverses Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa, and empties into the Indian Ocean through a number of delta-arms (the chief of which is that known as Chinde) in about lat. 18° 36' S. The course of the western portion of the river beyond for some distance the boundary lies between Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa, and the river there receives the Kuando, its chief southern tributary. The upper course of the Zambesi is largely across a monotonous expanse of grass- and forest country whose fundament is constituted in large part by superimposed sheets of nearly horizontal lava or trap. A short distance after entering Rhodesia, and after forming minor rapids and cascades, the river is precipitated in the magnificent Victoria Falls (225 miles NW of Beitun) into a profound transverse chasm measuring 1600 yards in length and 250-345 ft. in depth (with a width hardly exceeding 100 ft.) and is then carried away in a tortuous and in places turbulent course, through gorges and over flat country to Portuguese East Africa. The Kobrasas Rapids, in this territory NW of Tete are the lowest obstructing rapids in the river which is hence continuously navigable to its mouth, over a distance of 400 miles. Above these rapids the river is again navigable without obstruction to Zambo, in the extreme W of Portuguese East Africa, and virtually on the Rhodesian frontier. Several times of Manbo ply regularly on the course between Tete and the sea. The chief tributary of the Zambesi is the Shiré the outlet of Lake Nyassa, which joins the major stream a short distance above the head of its delta. The Zambesi is crossed by the Cape-to-Cairo railway immediately below the Victoria Falls where it flows through a gorge only about 400 ft. wide. The bridge, completed in 1905 has its roadway elevated 430 ft. above the water. Length estimated at about 1600 miles.

Zanzibar, zá za-ber or Zanguibar, záng ghar an island of eastern Africa, in the Indian Ocean, forming part of the sultanate and of the British Protectorates of Zanzibar in about lat. 6° 20' S 20-30 miles E. of the coast of German East Africa. Area, 648 sq m. It is mostly low (rising to its highest point to about 1000 feet), partly of coral formation and with a very fertile soil. Nearly the whole of the island is cultivated. Cloves and coconuts are extensively grown and constitute an important resource of the island. The population, which is of a very heterogeneous character as the result of the intermingling and intermarriage of the representatives of various eastern African tribes with Arabs, Persians, and traders of other races, is thought to number about 150,000. The island acquires special importance through its capital the city of Zanzibar situated on the W coast, which is the commercial centre oremporium of the trade with eastern equatorial Africa. The European residents probably do not much exceed 200. The climate of the island is fairly healthy although it has a markedly tropical temperature (mean for the year 89°)

Zanzibar, a sultanate of eastern Africa, comprising the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, and with nominal authority extending over the coast-land (to a width of 10 miles from the sea) of the East Africa Protectorate. The sultanate, as restricted to the two islands, is a British Protectorate, having an area of 1020 sq m and a population of about 200,000 (150,000 on the island of Zanzibar). It is administered by a resident British agent.

Zanzibar, capital of the sultanate of Zanzibar and residence of the British agent of the Zanzibar Protectorate, is situated on the W coast of the island of its own name on the E side of a small bay. It is irregularly built, with small winding lane-like streets and almost wholly without architectural features. It has palaces of the sultan, a fort, barracks, hospitals and a number of mission posts or stations. Zanzibar is an important port of call and coaling-station and the emporium of the trade with east-central Africa. It exports large quantities of native produce and ivory and is the leading slave-market of the world. It has manufactures of copper- and other metallic wares. land on the W. On the N it is nearly enclosed by the islands Texel, Vlieland, Terschelling, and Ameland, forming part of the Frisian Islands, which at one time constituted a continuous land-mass separating an inland sea or lake (the ancient Zuider Zee) from the open ocean. The continuity of this land-mass, largely in the nature of raised beaches and shifting dunes, was broken through by irruptions of the sea in the latter part of the thirteenth century since which time the inland basin has remained in open communication with the ocean. The chief connecting passages are (beginning in the W) the Marsdiep, Eijer landachtgat, Vlie Stroom, Ameland Gat, and the Friesscher Gat. The extreme length of the Zuider Zee from N to S is 80 miles; greatest width 34 miles. Near the middle it narrows to a width of about 16 miles, being thus divided into an inner and an outer basin. The mean depth is about 15 feet with an extreme of 43 feet. The Zee contains several islands,--Wieringen in the NW., Marken in the SW. Sobekind in the E and some smaller ones. Its chief tributary is the IJssel, an arm of the Rhine, in the SE. The North Sea Canal, leaving the Zee at Amsterdam, affords communication with the open sea near Ymuiden. It has been proposed to drain the lower basin of the Zuider Zee (Zijlvaer, thence a name of Spain, provinces and 55 miles NE. of Granada. Pop. (communes) in 1900, 4572.
